Macedonia, mas-se-do'ne-ą, in ancient geography a country lying N. of Greece, between Illyria on the W. and Thrace on the E., and bordering on the Ægean Sea. It later included the peninsula of Chalcidice. Among the cities, inclusive of those in Chalcidice, were Pella (the capital), Pydna, Thessalonica (Therma), Philippi, Amphipolis, Potidæa (Cassandria), and Olynthos. On the border of Thessaly was Mount Olympus. Macedon became powerful under Philip (father of Alexander the Great), whose victory at Chæronea, in 338 B.C., secured to him the overlordship of Greece. Alexander conquered the vast Persian Empire, 334–327 B.C., and thus built up a mighty Macedonian realm in three continents, extending from the Adriatic to India, and embrâcing Egypt. It fell to pieces on his death in 323 B.C., and Macedonia became again a kingdom by itself, Greece remaining partially subject to it for a time. Not long after the overthrow of King Perseus, in 168 B.C., Macedonia became a Roman province. The Macedonians have not usually been regarded as true Greeks (their country was not included in Hellas), but their language has been shown to have been a Greek tongue. The name Macedonia has been revived as a modern designation. The region is now a part of Turkey and embraces a perfect medley of peoples, the chief elements being Slavs, Osmanlis, and Greeks. A large fraction of the Slavs (Bulgarians and Serbs) are Mohammedans.

Mackenzie River, a large river of Canada, which in the upper part of its course is called the ATHABASCA (which see). This rises near Mount Brown and enters Lake Athabasca, from which Great Slave River runs nearly northward to Great Slave Lake. The water accumulated in this lake issues from its western end and runs northwestward. The name of Mackenzie is applied to that part of the river which is between its mouth and Great Slave Lake. In the lower part of its course it runs near the NE. base of the Rocky Mountains, and in some portions in a valley between parallel chains, 3000–4000 feet in height. It enters the Arctic Ocean near lat. 68° 50′ N. and lon. 135° W., in a delta with many arms, and over a large alluvial flat, in which the depth of water is reduced to 12 feet and less. The length of the river from Great Slave Lake to the ocean is nearly 900 miles; navigation is uninterrupted as far as Fort Smith, on the Great Slave River, a distance from the mouth of 1100 miles. The chief tributaries are the Liard, Great Bear, and Peel. The more important posts on its banks are Forts Chippewyan, Smith, Resolution, Providence, Simpson, Wrigley, Norman, and Good Hope. The river is a mile wide at many places; the northern part of it is closed by ice nearly 9 months in the year. The Mackenzie, including the Athabasca and Great Slave rivers, is about 2300 miles long.

Madagascar, mad'ą-gas'kąr, a great island and French colony in the Indian Ocean, lying off the E. coast of Africa, and forming, it is thought, part of a land-mass ("Lemuria" of some naturalists) which at a recent geological period united that continent with the Indian peninsula. It extends from Cape Amber, its most N. point, lat. 11° 57′ S., to Cape St. Mary, its most S. point, lat. 25° 35′ S., a distance of 975 miles. The greatest breadth hardly exceeds 350 miles. Area, estimated at 230,000 sq. m. The Strait of Mozambique, which separates Madagascar from the African coast, is at its narrowest point about 240 miles in width.

A tract of elevated land, rising by successive terraces, extends N. and S. throughout the island. The N. half assumes a mountainous character. It is only at the SE. extremity of the island that the high land reaches the sea; everywhere else the coast is bordered by a broad strip of level land. This tract of low land has on the E. side of Madagascar a width varying from 20 to 50 miles; on the W. it is double that extent; it is overspread with marshes which breed malignant fevers. The central table-land is supposed to lie from 3000 to 5000 feet above sea-level and is largely in the form of steppe or prairie, in greater part destitute of trees and carved up into castellated forms, pyramids, and spires. The highest elevation of the land appears to be in the Ankaratra mountains, in the east-central part of the island, and is probably, in part, of volcanic origin; elevation, 8800 feet. The rugged character of the country is such as to have allowed it to remain without roads. The central plateau is in great part surrounded by a belt of thick forest, which reaches down to the maritime plains and in a few places extends even to the sea-shore.

The rivers of Madagascar are very numerous, but few of them are available, even to a moderate extent, for the purposes of navigation. They fall rapidly from the high land of the interior and then spread into lakes in the low maritime regions, reaching the sea-shore with slow currents, so that their mouths, particularly on the W. coast, are barred. On the NW. side of the island, where the elevated coast is broken into inlets and deep bays, the rivers are often accessible and navigable in boats for some distance. The largest of these rivers is the Betisbuka, which falls into the Bay of Bembatuka in about lat. 16° S. Boats can ascend it for a distance of 160 miles. Other streams are the Mangoka, Onilahy, and Tsiribihina.

The prevailing rocks are granite, syenite, and pure quartz, with abundant volcanic masses and a long series of stratified rocks, which probably compose the subordinate ridges, or nearly all beyond the central heights. Iron is abundant, the chief deposits lying in the neighborhood of the volcanic rocks. Among other minerals are gold (found principally in the basin of the Betsibuka), lead, copper, manganese, plumbago, rock-salt (an important article of inland trade), nitre, and sulphur, and there are also large lignitic (coal) deposits. The value of the gold export in 1901 was about $650,000.

Climate, Flora, and Fauna.—The heat on the coasts is often intense, but on the highlands of Ankova and elsewhere the thermometer rarely rises above 85°, and in the winter it often sinks to 40° (even lower on the Ankaratra mountains), hail and sleet being frequent. On the coasts the rains are nearly constant, beginning in the evening and lasting sometimes all night. In the interior there is a hot and rainy season, comprising the months November–April, and a cool and dry season embracing the balance of the year. The average annual rainfall at Tananarivo is 53 inches; at Tamatave, 90–100 inches. The average mean temperature at these two localities is 62° and 75° respectively.

Although the interior of Madagascar remains still largely unexplored by botanists, enough is known of the vegetable productions of the island to attest their richness and variety. The most important trees are the baobab (Adansonia), the ravenala (Urania speciosa), filao (Casuarina equisetifolia), raphia palm, ambaravatsi (Tapia edulis), feeding the native silk-worm, areca, pandanus, azaina, yielding a gum greatly valued as a cement, ebony, and ravintsara (Agathophyllum aromaticum), which produces a highly fragrant spice; besides these there are numerous dye-woods, varieties of Indian fig, tamarind, trees and shrubs yielding gum elastic, copal and other gums, and the zozoro or papyrus, peculiar to the island. Ginger, pepper, and indigo grow wild in the woods; cotton, coffee, cacao, sugar-cane, tobacco, and hemp are cultivated. Except in the NW. and W., where the Sakalavas subsist chiefly on arrow-root, the principal food of the Malagasies is rice. The cocoanut (on the coast), the plantain and banana, yams, manioc, maize, millet, beans, potatoes, etc., add to the general abundance. Besides the native fruits, the orange, peach, citron, mulberry, and even grapes, introduced by Europeans, are now widely diffused over the island.

The fauna of Madagascar is of the African type, but is lacking almost entirely in the carnivore and ungulate forms that belong to that continent and is distinguished by the number of genera and species that are peculiar to the island. This is the home, par excellence, of the singular group of the lemurs, or half-apes, and it alone has the remarkable aye-aye. The only native predatory animal is the fox-like Eryptoprocta. The birds are as distinctive as the quadrupeds; a recently exterminated form is the giant Æpyornis, a struthious bird of nearly twice the height of the ostrich. Among lizards the chameleons are particularly numerous. Many domestic animals have been introduced. The horned cattle, in which chiefly consists the wealth of the Malagasy, are of the humped kind, like those of India. There are, however, in the forests wild cattle which have no hump.

People, Government, History.—The bulk of the Malagasies (Fr. Malgaches), or inhabitants of Madagascar, are by no means African, the Malayan element predominating in their greatly mixed blood. The principal peoples are the Hovas (the dominant race, numbering about 850,000, who may be regarded as belonging to the Malayan stock), the Sakalavas (whose negro affinities are very pronounced), Betsimisarakas, Betsileos, Baras, and Antankaras. There are on the coasts and in the large towns many people of Arab, East Indian, and Suaheli descent. Of the Malagasy dialects, which belong to the Malayo-Polynesian group of languages, the most highly developed is that of the Hovas, in which books and newspapers have been printed. The administration of the colony is vested in a governor-general, assisted by an administrative council, whose seat is at Tananarivo, which has a population of about 55,000. The chief port is Tamatave, on the E. coast; the chief port on the NW. is Majunga.

The Portuguese appear to have discovered Madagascar within two or three years after the doubling of the Cape of Good Hope by Vasco da Gama. In the course of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries the colonizing nations of Europe attempted to obtain a foothold on the island, but unsuccessfully. The principal effort was made by the French in the reign of Louis XIV., but their cruel treatment of the natives brought on failure. Early in the nineteenth century, however, the French were planted in a few places. Radama, the ruler from 1810 to 1828 of the powerful state of the Hovas, a prince who learned much on British soil, established many reforms and instituted numerous improvements and opened his realm to British influence. He was poisoned, in 1828, by his queen, Ranavalona, who in a short time undid as far as possible all that he had accomplished. France assumed a protectorate over the island in 1890, but it was not officially recognized as a colony until 1896, after a war of occupation in the preceding year. Pop. in 1901, estimated at 2,505,237, of whom 15,524 were Europeans.

Madeira, mȧ-dee'rȧ (Port. pron. mȧ-dȧ'rȧ), an island in the Atlantic Ocean, belonging to Portugal, about 440 miles from the coast of Morocco, between lat. 32° 36′ and 32° 53′ N. and lon. 16° 40′ and 17° 20′ W. It is 35 miles long and 12 miles broad. It consists of a mass of volcanic rocks, whose highest peak, the Pico Ruivo, reaches an elevation of 6060 feet. Through the W. half of the island runs a central ridge, about 5000 ft. high, on which is an extensive plain called Paul de Serra, and from which steep ridges extend to the coast, where they form precipices 1000–2000 ft. high (Cabo Girao, 1935 ft.). These cliffs are interrupted by a few small bays, which are the sites of the villages of Madeira. The Curral das Freiras, near the centre of the island, is a vast cirque or amphitheatre, enclosed by the loftiest of the mountain summits (Ruivo, Cidrão, Canario, Torres). The road round the island is in many places exceedingly picturesque, passing often between lofty cliffs, or along the front of precipices overhanging the sea. The mountain-steeps of Madeira are clothed with a remarkably rich and luxuriant verdure. In the lower portions of the island groves of orange- and lemon-trees are mingled with the vineyards; higher up, bananas, figs, pomegranates, etc., are seen; and still higher, apples, currants, pears, and peaches. Coffee and arrow-root, both of excellent quality, are also grown. Wheat, barley, rye, and Indian corn are raised. The richest vine-district, and the part where grows the Malmsey grape, is the valley of the Cama de Lobos, on the S. side of the island. Formerly its famous wine was the staple export of Madeira, but a disease of the vines for a time nearly suspended all wine-making. At present, however, considerable wine is produced, the annual shipments from the island amounting to between 5000 and 6000 pipes. The fauna of Madeira is a component of the faunas of Europe and northern Africa. Beyond possibly some rats and bats, there were at the time of the discovery of the island no mammalians. The climate is very equable and is famed for its salubrity; the mean temperature at the level of the sea is 65°, and the ordinary extremes 74° and 55°. The absolute maximum and minimum temperatures are 85° and 49°. The annual rainfall, which is represented by about 90 days of precipitation, is 24–30 inches. Snow is sometimes seen on the higher mountains. Madeira is much resorted to by invalids, particularly those suffering from pulmonary affections. Transportation is rendered slow and difficult by the steepness of the acclivities, and sleds drawn by oxen, often handsomely fitted up, take the place of wheeled vehicles. Capital, Funchal. The language is Portuguese. Pop. in 1900, 148,172.

The group of islands called the MADEIRA ISLANDS (or Madeira Group) consists of the islands of Madeira and Porto Santo, and the three islets called the Desertas, in lat. 32° 3′ to 33° 7′ N., lon. 16° 13′ to 16° 38′ W. They were discovered by the Portuguese in 1419. The name Madeira was given to the principal island from the magnificent forests of timber (in Portuguese, madeira) which then covered it. (See DESERTAS and PORTO SANTO.) The islands form a district of the kingdom of Portugal, with an area of about 315 sq. m.

Madeira, or Cayarí, kī-å-ree′, a river of Brazil, is formed, on the Bolivian frontier, by the junction of the Beni and Mamoré, in lat. 10° 30′ S., lon. 65° 25′ W., whence it flows NE. 700 miles (in a direct line) and joins the Amazon (of which it is the largest tributary) in lat. 3° 30′ S. Including the Mamoré, its principal branch, which some consider as the true Madeira, it has a length of about 2000 miles, for nearly 1000 of which it is navigable. For about 550 miles from its mouth it is at all times navigable for vessels drawing 6 feet; above this, between lat. 8° 50′ and 11° S., the navigation is interrupted by numerous cataracts, beyond which the river is again navigable for small steamboats for several hundred miles. Continuous navigation properly extends to Santo Antonio, at the foot of the rapids of the same name. In the lower 500 miles of its course the depth varies from 27 to 200 feet, and at its junction with the Amazon it has a width of nearly two miles. The Madeira derives its name from the great quantity of timber (madeira) or logs brought down by the periodical floods. See MAMORÉ.

Madras, mȧ-drass', a maritime city of British India, capital of the province of Madras, on the Bay of Bengal (Coromandel Coast). Lat. of observatory, 13° 4′ 8″ N.; lon. 80° 14′ 50″ E. It is situated on an open shore, exposed to the heavy swell of the sea. Great breakwaters have been constructed to render the harbor more secure, and engineering works are still in progress. The commercial quarter of Madras is located in what is called the Black Town, which is very closely and irregularly built on low ground. The public offices (court-house, admiralty-building, custom-house) and business houses which line the beach are stately structures. South of the Black Town is the citadel, Fort St. George, which may be considered the nucleus of the city. It is garrisoned by native and British troops. Here are the offices of the civil and military administration, St. Mary's Church, the oldest English church in India, government house, cathedral of St. George, etc. South of Fort St. George is an island, formed by the Cooum River, which serves as a military parade ground. Beyond this, to the S. and W., are thickly peopled residential quarters, succeeded by suburban sections, bearing native names. Back of the Black Town are also extensive suburbs. In the extreme S. is the former Portuguese town of São Thomé. On the outskirts of the city are great tanks. The mansions of the Europeans are largely located in park-like places called "compounds." Madras has a number of handsome edifices, such as the Government House, St. George's cathedral, the Scottish church of St. Andrew, the university buildings, the new law courts, Patcheappah's Hall, Memorial Hall, and the Chepauk Palace. There is a large arsenal. Besides the university (an examining institution), Madras possesses Presidency College, schools of law, medicine, agriculture, engineering and art, Victoria Technical Institute, a teachers' college, the Madras Christian College, a botanical garden, a valuable museum, physical observatory, etc. Madras is an Anglican bishop's see and São Thomé has a Roman Catholic bishop. There are a number of Christian churches. The city is supplied with water from reservoirs fed by the Cortelliar River. It has a large public park. Madras carries on an extensive commerce. It exports coffee, rice, cotton, indigo, hides, etc. Its manufacturing industries are unimportant, except in the production of the well-known cotton "Madrases." There are dye-works, tanneries, potteries, breweries, glass-works, etc.

The English began establishing themselves at Madras in 1639. It soon became their chief station on the Coromandel Coast. In 1746 it was taken by the French, who kept it until 1749, when the place was restored to the English. In the latter year São Thomé, founded by the Portuguese as early as 1504, was annexed. In 1758–59 the place was unsuccessfully besieged by the French. Pop. in 1901, 509,397, nearly four-fifths Hindus, one-eighth Mohammedans, and nearly one-tenth Christians.

Madras, one of the great provinces of British India, formerly styled a presidency. It comprises the extreme southern part of the peninsula of India and the eastern part as far N. nearly as the parallel of 21° N. lat., together with a narrow strip extending northward along the W. coast as far as the parallel of 14°. About the middle of the province there is a projection which extends W. to within 100 miles of the Arabian Sea. Part of the coast-land on the Bay of Bengal is known as the Coromandel Coast and that on the Arabian Sea is part of the Malabar Coast. The province embraces the old Carnatic (in the SE.). Madras borders on Bengal (Orissa), the Central Provinces, Hyderabad, Mysore, and Bombay. Area, exclusive of the native states, 141,726 sq. m. Area of the native states, 9969 sq. m. These states are Travancore, Cochin, Pudukota, Karnul, and Bellary. Pop. of the province in 1901, exclusive of native states, 38,209,436; of the native states, 4,188,088. A large part of Madras belongs to the great South Indian interior plateau of the Deccan. This is flanked on the E. by the range of the Eastern Ghats, between which and the Bay of Bengal is the broad Coromandel lowland. Along the Malabar Coast extend the Western Ghats. In the S., where the two ranges converge, are the Nilgiri Hills, forming a connecting link between them. The principal rivers of Madras are the Godavery and Kistna, with their tributaries, and the Pennar, Palar, and Cavery, and Coleroon (an arm of the Cavery). The rivers pour their waters into the Bay of Bengal. The principal crops are millet and rice, a great part of the artificially irrigated land, which is very extensive, being devoted to the latter. Oil-seeds, cotton, and pulse are extensively raised. Among other crops are sugar, indigo, tobacco, coffee, tea, and cinchona. There are extensive forests, yielding teak, ebony, and other valuable timber trees. Among the minerals are gold and diamonds. The bulk of the inhabitants belong to the Telugu and Tamil branches of the Dravidian (non-Aryan) stock. The governor of Madras receives his appointment from the Crown. The seat of the administration is the city of Madras.

Madre de Dios River, South America, rises in southeastern Peru, flows NE. through Bolivia, and joins the Beni, with a width of three-quarters of a mile, a short distance above the confluence of the latter with the Mamoré. Length, estimated at about 850 miles; the stream is in most parts navigable.

Madrid, mȧ-drid' (Sp. pron. mȧ-dreen', almost mȧth-reeth'), the capital city of Spain and the seat of the captain-general of New Castile, in a province of its own name, on the Manzanares, in the centre of the peninsula, lat. (observatory) 40° 24′ 29″ N., lon. 3° 41′ 15″ W., 2150 feet above sea-level. The city, which is one of the finest capitals of Europe, is built on several low and irregular sand-hills and is surrounded by a barren and extensive plain, which, except on the SW., has no visible limit but the horizon. The streets of the old town are narrow, crooked, and dingy, but the newer quarters, which extend into the heart of the city, are laid out in fine boulevards, capacious squares, and promenades. The focal point of life and commerce is the Puerta del Sol, one of the old gate-ways, and the principal plaza in Madrid. Other squares are the Plaza Mayor (or Plaza de la Constitución), containing the equestrian statue of Philip III., probably the finest monumental work of the capital, and in which were for a long time conducted spectacular and other shows, tournaments, and executions; the Plaza de Oriente, with an equestrian statue of Philip IV., on one side of which is the royal theatre, accommodating 2400 persons, and on another the royal palace,—a massive granite building 500 feet in length—containing a library of upward of 100,000 volumes and a rare collection of tapestries;

the Plaza de la Independencia, surrounded by stately private edifices; and the Plaza de Toros, occupied by the huge bull-ring, which has a diameter of 335 feet and gives accommodation to 14,000 spectators. The most famous promenades, which are among the finest in Europe and exhibit the life of fashion and wealth of the capital in a way seen in but few cities, are the Prado, the Paseo de Recoletos, and the Paseo de la Castellana, which are flanked by palatial residences and by some of the most renowned institutions of the city. Among these are the Museo del Prado, or national museum of paintings and sculptures, containing one of the finest collections of the world, especially rich in the treasures of the Spanish school of painting and particularly the works of Velazquez; the palace of the national library (with about 1,000,000 printed volumes) and of the museums of natural history, national archæology, and of modern art; the mint, and the Bank of Spain. Towards the eastern limits of the city is the Park of Madrid, formerly known as Buen Retiro, a pleasure ground of 260 acres, adjoined on one side by the botanical garden. The gardens of the royal palace, known as the Campo del Moro, which were first laid out by Philip II. in 1556, cover the space between the palace and the Manzanares River. Among the remaining notable institutions and buildings of Madrid are the Casa de Ayuntamiento (or city-hall), the palace of the Cortes, exchange, naval museum, armory (with a world-renowned collection of arms and armor, founded by Charles V. and placed in Madrid by Philip II.), artillery museum, and the royal stables. Foremost among the educational institutions is the university, formerly at Alcalá de Henares, but removed to Madrid in 1836. It contains a library of upward of 200,000 volumes. In 1900–01 its courses were attended by 5118 students. Madrid possesses schools of music, architecture, and industrial arts, a royal observatory, a military institute, geographical and statistical institute, and various other learned associations. Among the ecclesiastical buildings are the cathedral, the church of St. Francis the Great, partially modelled after the Pantheon at Rome and recognized as the national Pantheon, and the church of San Jerónimo.

Madrid has one of the worst climates of any city in Europe, being visited by frequent cold and almost icy blasts sweeping off from the Sierra de Guadarama, which have given rise to various forms of pulmonary and bronchial affections. Throughout many months of the year the range of temperature is within a few hours 35 degrees. The average annual temperature is 58°, with extremes in winter of 9° and in summer of 110°. The city is supplied with water from the Sierra de Guadarama, from a locality, Lozoya, 42 miles distant. The chief industrial establishments are the manufactories of tobacco (National Tobacco Factory, with upward of 2000 hands), carpets, tapestry, jewelry, leather, musical instruments, perfumery, etc.

Magdalena, mag-dȧ-lee'nȧ (Sp. pron. mȧg-dȧ-lä'nȧ), the principal river of Colombia, rises at the frontier of Ecuador, lat. 2° N., lon. 76° W., flows N., and enters the Caribbean Sea in lat. 11° N., lon. 75° W. Total course, estimated at 950 miles. Principal tributaries are the Cauca on the left and the Sogamoso on the right. Above Mompoz it divides, to enclose the island of Morales, 40 miles in length. Its current is very rapid and its navigation difficult, but it is still the main route of communication between the interior of Colombia and the sea. River steamers ascend regularly from Barranquilla to Honda, about 600 miles, where navigation is arrested by a series of rapids, around which a railroad has been constructed. The upper Magdalena is again navigable to Neiva. The delta-arms are much obstructed and the chief entry of merchandise is made via Sabanilla and a connecting railroad to Barranquilla.

Magdalena, the most northern department of Colombia, bordering on the Caribbean Sea, into which the Goajira peninsula projects, NW. of the Gulf of Venezuela. Area, 27,000 sq. m. The principal dependence of the inhabitants is upon the cod-, lobster-, herring- and seal-fisheries. The Magdalen Islands are under the jurisdiction of the Canadian government, constitute an outport, and belong to the district of Gaspé.

Magdeburg, mag'de-bŭrg (Ger. pron. mȧg'dĕh-bŏŏrg'; L. Magdebur'gum), a city of Prussia, capital of the province of Saxony and of a government district, on the Elbe, 76 miles WSW. of Berlin. The river here divides into two arms, between which is a third narrow channel. Magdeburg is one of the strongest fortresses of the German Empire. The main portion of the city, the Altstadt, with the suburbs of Wilhelmstadt, Neustadt, Sudenburg and Buckau, lies on the left bank of the Elbe. On the large island formed by the river are the quarter called the Werder and the citadel, and on the right bank is the suburb of Friedrichstadt. The fortifications consist of the citadel, redoubts, and a circle of detached forts. The old town is intersected from N. to S. by a broad thoroughfare, the Breiter Weg, lined with fine shops and quaint seventeenth-century houses. The principal street is the Kaiserstrasse, running parallel with the Breiter Weg, and the chief open places are the Domplatz (or Neumarkt) with the cathedral, the Alte Markt with a monument to Emperor Otho the Great, erected by the municipality in the thirteenth century and recently restored, and the Kaiser Wilhelm Platz with a statue of William I. Among the ecclesiastical buildings, the most noteworthy are the cathedral of Saints Maurice and Catharine, begun in the thirteenth century and completed in the sixteenth, a superb edifice with many tombs and monuments, including the tomb of Archbishop Ernest of Saxony (died in 1513), a masterpiece of Peter Vischer, and those of Otho the Great and his wife Editha; the eleventh-century Romanesque cruciform church of Our Lady; the church of St. Sebastian containing the tomb of Otto von Guericke, the inventor of the air-pump; the Gothic church of St. Ulrich, and the new synagogue. The most interesting secular structures are the seventeenth-century town-hall, the old royal palace, now a museum, the various government buildings, the Exchange, and the imperial bank. The educational institutions comprise a pedagogical seminary, an industrial art school, and a technical school. There are a municipal library of about 30,000 volumes, a valuable collection of Saxon archives, and a museum of art.

Magdeburg has large and very diversified industries. There are immense steel-works and machine-shops, forming part of the great Krupp establishment, among whose products are plates and other parts of battleships and projectiles, other establishments turning out iron and steel products and machinery, extensive distilleries, and manufactures of chemicals, chicory, chocolate, tobacco and cigars, ribbons, leather, gloves, and musical instruments. The town is a great centre of the beet-sugar industry. There is a large trade in fine fruits and vegetables. The increase in population has been due in part to the annexation of suburbs. Pop. in 1849, 56,181; in 1890, 202,234; in 1900, 229,663. The inhabitants are mostly Protestants.

Magdeburg became the seat of an archbishop in the tenth century. In the latter part of the Middle Ages it rose to great commercial importance and was a prominent member of the Hansa. It was one of the first cities to adopt the Reformation; the archbishops were succeeded by administrators. In 1631, in the Thirty Years' War, Magdeburg was stormed by the Imperialists under Tilly and Pappenheim, who burned the city to the ground (the cathedral, however, escaping) and slaughtered the inhabitants.

Later in the century Magdeburg was united with the dominions of Brandenburg.

Their religion is Hinduism. They rose to great power under a prince named Sivagi in the second half of the seventeenth century at the expense of the Mogul Empire, to whose decline they greatly contributed. Before long the chief power in the Mahratta state was usurped by the prime-minister (or Peshwa). Early in the eighteenth century we find 5 Mahratta states, whose rulers for a time collectively held a dominant position in India—Baroda, Gwalior, Indore, Nagpur, and the Peshwa's dominions (capital, Poona). In 1761 the power of the Mahrattas was shattered by the Afghans, and in the course of the next sixty years they succumbed to the British. The states under Mahratta rulers (vassals of the British) are at present Baroda, Gwalior, and Indore.

Maine, mȧn, a river of Kerry co., Ireland, after a course of about 18 miles, falls into Castlemaine Harbor.

Maine, an ancient province of France, bounded N. by Normandy, E. by Orléannais, and S. by Anjou and Touraine. With Perche it constituted a general government. Its capital was Le Mans. It is now included in the departments of Sarthe and Mayenne.

Maine, one of the New England states and the northeasternmost state of the American Union, bounded N. by Quebec, E. by New Brunswick, S. by the Atlantic Ocean, and W. by New Hampshire and Quebec. Its NW. boundary follows for some distance the crest of a range of low mountains, a parallel outlier of the Canadian Notre Dame range. Leaving this crest, the line follows the SW. branch of the river St. John for some distance northeastward, and then takes a direct NE. course to near lat. 47° 30′ N., the most northerly portion of the eastern United States. Thence eastward the rivers St. Francis and St. John bound the state on the N. The eastern boundary ascends the river St. Croix to its source, and thence strikes directly N. until the river St. John is reached. The coast of Maine (about 250 miles long in a direct line) is indented deeply by many bays and inlets, which increase the actual coast-line to upward of 2000 miles and afford unrivalled harbor-facilities for shipping. Off the coast there are numerous islands belonging to the state. Area of the land-surface, 29,895 sq. m.; of the appertaining waters, about 3100 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—The northern portion of the state consists largely of a wilderness of forest-land covered with pine, spruce, hemlock, fir, and deciduous trees of various species, the abode of the moose (or true elk), the black bear, and various fur-bearing and game animals, and the resort of the trapper, the sportsman, and the lumberman. Until recently the primeval forest covered three-fourths of the state's area, but extensive lumbering has materially lessened the woodland, thinned the forest into second and third growths, and introduced extensive clearings, many of which have been put to agricultural uses. In the more largely forested sections the permanent inhabitants are few, except in the NE., where the fertile soil of Aroostook co. has attracted settlers and developed a hardy and prosperous class of farmers and mechanics. All parts of the state abound in beautiful lakes, famed for their trout, pickerel, and pike. In the N. and NW. are groups of detached mountains, which belong to the Appalachian system and are in part more or less directly connected with the White Mountains of New Hampshire. Mount Katahdin, the highest peak in the state, situated in its north-central part, reaches an elevation of 5200 feet. Other noteworthy elevations are Mars Hill, on the E. line; Sugar Loaf, on the river Seboois; Saddleback, Bigelow (3600 ft.), Bald, Kineo (on Moosehead Lake, 1760 ft.), Spencer, Abraham (3387 ft.), Culcusso, Mucalsca, White Cap, and the Aroostook and Travellers' mountains. The southern half of the state is of varied character, seldom much broken in surface, but with tracts of great fertility and others of small agricultural value, the latter found especially southeastward.

Rivers, Lakes, etc.—The Penobscot is the largest river, and is navigable for ships, except in winter, to Bangor (60 miles from the sea), while its upper waters are navigated by small steamboats. Parallel with the lower course of the Penobscot is the Kennebec, which is navigable as far as Waterville, 68 miles from the sea. Various other rivers as well as lakes afford steam navigation. The Androscoggin, Saco, St. Croix, Aroostook, and Walloostook (or St. John) are important streams. The water-power of the principal streams is constant and is extensively employed by manufacturers. Of the hundreds of lakes which are scattered over the greater part of the area of the state, and which are in the main of glacial origin, the principal or better known are Moosehead, Chesuncook, Schoodic, Grand, Rangeley, Eagle, and Sebago. The fresh waters of Maine are estimated to cover one-tenth of its area.

Objects of Interest to Tourists.—The water-falls, mountains, wild forests, and countless lakes of Maine, with the cool summer climate of the north, afford attractions to the tourists which are more and more widely appreciated every year; and the charms of its bold and rocky sea-coast, with its thousand bays, its bold promontories, and its picturesque islands, are well known to artists. The fishing- and hunting-grounds about Moosehead Lake, the grand solitude of Mount Katahdin, and the varied combinations of beauty and sublimity on the coast at Mount Desert Island (on which is the summer-resort of Bar Harbor), Kennebunkport, and Casco Bay (on which is situated Portland), are especially noteworthy.

Geology, Mineral Resources.—Seemingly the greater part of the surface strata of Maine are of Archæan age; but Silurian rocks cover a large part of the N. and NE., with smaller areas in the SE. and SW. and elsewhere. Overlying the Silurian there are in places wide belts of Devonian strata. A vast section is covered with glacial drift or bears evidence of having undergone extensive glaciation. The mineral wealth of the state has so far been but imperfectly developed. Thomaston, Rockland, Camden, and other counties burn and export large quantities of lime of excellent quality and there is much good building-stone. The granites of Hallowell, Bath, Rockland, Thomaston, Dix Island, Calais, and many other points have long been noted for their excellent or superior quality and have contributed materially to the resources of the state. Roofing-slates are found in abundance. The metallic minerals include iron (much of it magnetic), lead, zinc, and silver, but the deposits are not so rich as to have prompted large mining enterprises. The granite output in 1899 amounted to $1,321,080.

Climate, Soil, and Agriculture.—The great drawback to agriculture in Maine is the shortness of its summers; but the heavy snows prevent the ground from freezing deeply, and in the spring vegetation advances with exceedingly rapid steps. The hay and potato crops are of especial excellence in point of quality and quantity, and both afford a large surplus for export. Maize does well southward, and in the NE. winter wheat is a favored crop. The oats are of a superior quality. The chief agricultural crops in 1900 were: oats, 5,257,612 bushels; buckwheat, 719,760 bushels; corn, 440,244 bushels; barley, 315,319 bushels; wheat, 40,755 bushels; rye, 17,080 bushels; potatoes, 6,200,208 bushels; and hay, 843,997 tons. The apple-tree is hardy and productive in Maine, and much attention is given to its cultivation. The state breeds many horses and cattle for the markets of other states, and its dairy-products are of great value. The wool-clip is large and of good quality, the quantity of washed and unwashed wool obtained in 1900 amounting to 1,483,008 pounds. The aggregate value of the blueberries and huckleberries gathered from the waste lands and exported, both in the fresh and canned state, is very large, the value of the canned product alone amounting to upward of $100,000. The production of sugar from beets has been undertaken with profit.

Forest Products.—Maine has afforded very large quantities of the noble white (or Weymouth) pine, so highly prized by house- and ship-builders, but the production of this timber is now comparatively small and Maine has fallen from her rank as the first timber-producing state of the Union. But the lumber-industry is still very large and the state cuts, saws, and sells immense amounts of planks, deals, boards, scantlings, palings, laths, clap-boards, shingles, shooks, heading, ship-timber, furniture- and chair-stock, wooden-ware, carriage-stuff, and the like. Spruce, hemlock, cedar, beech, birch, hard maple, and black and white ash are the most abundant of the useful timber-trees. The forest products include potash, charcoal, firewood, tanners' bark (principally hemlock), and maple sugar, the last three having a large aggregate value. Oak timber is found near the coast, but is not especially abundant in the interior. The total woodland still covers nearly 80 per cent. of the area of the state; the largest forest tracts are of spruce, especially in the regions drained by the Androscoggin, Penobscot, and St. John rivers. The lumber-products of the state in 1900 were valued at $13,489,401. The rivers afford excellent facilities for the floating, rafting, sawing, and shipping of logs and lumber.

Fisheries and other Maritime Pursuits have naturally been prosecuted to a great extent here, on account of the excellent harbor-facilities presented by the deeply convoluted coast-line and the numerous navigable rivers and estuaries. The principal food-fishes taken are cod, mackerel, hake, herring, haddock, halibut, etc.; and a great number of unmerchantable or oil-producing fishes (chiefly the menhaden) are taken and utilized in the manufacture of oil and fish guano. Salmon are caught quite largely in the Penobscot and some of the other waters. The lobster-catch of Maine is very important, and canned lobster is extensively prepared for the general market. About 20,000 persons were in 1900 engaged in the sea- and shore-fisheries, bringing in an aggregate product of several million dollars. More than one-half of this amount is returned by the canned-sardine industry. Ship-building is still a leading pursuit in the coast towns, whose population is largely engaged in maritime pursuits and especially in the coasting trade. Maine owns many vessels employed in her own proper commerce, as well as in that of the other Atlantic states and in trade with the West Indies. The total tonnage launched in 1900 was upward of 58,000 tons.

Manufactures.—The important manufactures of lumber and lime, the building-stone industry, ship-building, etc., have already been alluded to. The great seats of the lumber-trade are Augusta, Bangor, Biddeford, Calais, Eastport, Fairfield, and Lewiston; those of ship-building are Bath, Bangor, Belfast, Calais, and other maritime towns. The cotton manufacture has its chief seats at Lewiston, Augusta, Biddeford, Brunswick, Waterville, etc., and is one of the leading industrial interests of the state. Woollens are manufactured at many points, chiefly for domestic use. The leather manufacture has assumed large proportions. Other considerable industries are the manufacture of scythes, axes, farming-implements, boots and shoes, paper and wood-pulp, bagging, cordage, spars, ship's furniture, glass, pottery, bricks, machinery, fish oil, fish guano, pickles, charcoal, starch, soap, and countless articles of wood, such as pegs, spools, slats, household wares, shuttles, lasts, furniture, barrels, shooks, kegs, small joinery, and turners' work. The canning of lobsters, fish, green corn, fruits, and vegetables for food is an extensive business and now ranks as one of the first industries of the state. Almost every community has its manufacturing pursuits and, although they are in many cases conducted upon a small scale, the total result is very great.

Commerce.—The exports of Maine include, in addition to lumber and the product of the fisheries and canning-establishments, a large proportion of the miscellaneous manufactured products of the state, as well as cattle, hay, potatoes, wool, and dairy-products. Ice is also gathered on a very large scale, and its collection, storage, and export afford profitable employment. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, the value of the exports passing through the different ports was $15,263,129.

Railroads.—Maine is traversed by railroads which form important links in the great chain of communication extending from Halifax, Nova Scotia, and Montreal southwestward to central Texas and westward to the Pacific coast. Portland is the great railroad centre of the state. In 1841 there were only 11 miles of railroad; in 1846, 62 miles; in 1850, 245 miles; in 1860, 472 miles; in 1870, 786 miles; in 1875, 980 miles; in 1890, 1377 miles; and in 1900, 1923 miles.

Counties, Cities and Towns, etc.—Maine has 16 counties, as follows: Androscoggin, Aroostook, Cumberland, Franklin, Hancock, Kennebec, Knox, Lincoln, Oxford, Penobscot, Piscataquis, Sagadahoc, Somerset, Waldo, Washington, and York. The chief cities and towns are Portland, the principal seaport, on Casco Bay (pop. in 1900, 50,145); Lewiston, a principal seat of the cotton manufacture (pop. 23,761); Bangor, on the Penobscot, a centre of the lumber-business and the seat of important trade and manufactures (21,850); Biddeford (16,145); Auburn (12,951); Augusta, the capital, on the Kennebec (11,863); Bath, a seaport near the mouth of the Kennebec (10,477); Waterville (9477); Rockland (8150); Calais (7655); Westbrook (7283); South Portland (6287); Oldtown, Gardiner, Eastport, Ellsworth, Brewer, Belfast, Skowhegan.

The legislature, whose members are elected biennially, consists of a House of Representatives (from the towns) and a Senate (representing districts bounded by county lines). The governor of the state is elected biennially. Maine sends 4 representatives to the lower house of the national Congress.

Education.—There are normal and training schools at Castine, Farmington, Gorham, Lewiston, and Springfield, besides a practice-school at Portland and private training-schools. Bowdoin College, at Brunswick, is the oldest and most largely endowed college in the state. Lewiston is the seat of Bates College, and Waterville of Colby College. At Orono is the University of Maine and state agricultural college. Theological schools exist at Bangor and Lewiston and a medical school at Brunswick, with a subsidiary or affiliated school at Portland. There are many academies and denominational schools, some of them of high reputation.

The Population of Maine is chiefly of New England stock, most of its original settlers having gone there from Massachusetts and New Hampshire after the war of independence (1775–83); but there has been a large immigration from the British provinces, mainly of French-speaking people, while the populous settlements of Acadian French in the extreme NE. date from 1755. Pop. in 1790, 96,540; in 1800, 151,719; in 1810, 228,705; in 1820, 298,335; in 1830, 399,455; in 1840, 501,793; in 1850, 583,169; in 1860, 628,279; in 1870, 626,915; in 1880, 648,936; in 1890, 661,086; in 1900, 694,466.

History.—In 1604 a French colony was planted on an island in the St. Croix River, but soon abandoned. An English colony established in 1607 by Sir John Popham and Sir Ferdinando Gorges at the mouth of Kennebec River fared no better. In 1622 Gorges and Sir John Mason received a grant of the southwestern corner of the region with part of what is now New Hampshire. A few years later permanent settlements were established. Eastern Maine was a portion of the French colony of Acadia. In 1635 the French expelled the English colonists from the Penobscot region and in 1665 they founded Castine. Soon after the middle of the seventeenth century Massachusetts brought the English settlements under her dominion. France had to surrender Acadia to England in 1713 and the limits of Maine were greatly extended. In 1820 the "district of Maine" was severed from Massachusetts and was admitted to the Union as a state. The boundary on the side of the British possessions was not clearly established until 1842, when it was settled by the Webster-Ashburton treaty.

Mainz, mīnts (anc. Maguntiacum or Mogontiacum; Fr. Mayence), also written in English Mentz and Mayence, the largest city of the grand-duchy of Hesse, capital of the province of Rhenish Hesse, and one of the principal fortresses of Germany, on the left bank of the Rhine, opposite the mouth of the Main, 20 miles WSW. of Frankfort. The older portion of the city, with its numerous Gothic buildings and its narrow and irregular streets, presents a picturesque appearance, but with the extension of the lines of circumvallation a fine modern section has sprung up to the NW. Where the new city adjoins the old town the Kaiserstrasse, a splendid parked avenue with a width of 200 feet, has been laid out. A fine esplanade with immense flights of stone stairs extends along the Rhine. The most noteworthy building is the venerable cathedral on the Marktplatz, dating in its present form from the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, having six towers and containing the handsome brazen doors of the tenth-century church and the tombs of many of the archbishops. Much work was expended on this edifice, in the way of restoration and rebuilding, in the course of the nineteenth century. Among other ecclesiastical structures are the mediæval church of St. Stephen (occupying a commanding position above the Rhine, with beautiful cloisters), the church of Our Lady, and the church of St. Peter. The most interesting secular structures are the former archiepiscopal and electoral palace, now a museum, containing a superb collection of Roman and Germanic antiquities, the municipal library of about 200,000 volumes, a picture-gallery, and the Gutenberg Museum; the recently constructed city-hall (Stadthalle), on the Stadtplatz; the grand-ducal residence, formerly a lodge of the Teutonic Knights, on the Schlossplatz; and the central railway station. The great quadrangular citadel on the site of the Roman castrum contains a circular mass of concrete in the form of a tower known as the Drususthurm (or Eigelstein) and supposed to have been erected to the memory of Drusus. There is a monument to Gutenberg, a native of Mainz, cast from designs by Thorwaldsen, on the Gutenbergplatz, and the Schillerplatz is adorned with a monument to the poet Schiller. In addition to the citadel the fortifications of Mainz consist of bastions, detached forts, fortifications on the island of Petersbau in the Rhine, and the strong defenses of Kastel on the opposite bank of the river, reached by a handsome bridge. Mainz has manufactures of leather goods, furniture, musical instruments, chemicals, cars, etc. It is an important commercial centre, figuring prominently in the trade between Germany on the one side and Belgium and Holland on the other.

Mainz was a place of great importance under the Romans. The barbarian invasions brought ruin upon it, but it revived under the Franks. Under its archbishops, who held the primacy in Germany, it rose into prominence, and by the tenth century it was a considerable city. About the middle of the thirteenth century it became autonomous, but about two centuries later the archbishops brought the city, which had become a flourishing centre of trade, again under their dominion. Mainz witnessed the birth of the art of printing with movable types shortly before the middle of the fifteenth century. The archbishops of Mainz possessed the dignity of imperial electors and were archchancellors of the Empire. Their temporal sway extended over considerable territory. The principality was swallowed up in the wars of the French Revolution, the city remaining for many years in the hands of the French. The secularization of the archbishopric took place in 1803 and about the same time the see was degraded from the rank of an archbishopric to that of a bishopric. In 1816 Mainz was assigned to Hesse-Darmstadt and was constituted a fortress of the German Confederation. On the organization of the new German Empire in 1871 it became an imperial fortress. From 1477 down to the close of the eighteenth century Mainz was the seat of a university. Pop. in 1890, 72,159; in 1901, 84,251.

Lat. 36° 43′ N.; lon. 4° 26′ W. Pop. in 1900, 131,063. It is built in the form of an amphitheatre, enclosed by mountains, and is overlooked by a fine old Moorish castle, called the Gibralfaro. The streets are in the main narrow, with high houses built around courts. There is a fine promenade (Paseo de la Alameda), on which are some of the best houses in the town. The chief buildings include an imposing cathedral, with a spire 280 feet high; the episcopal palace, several hospitals, the opera-house, and the bull-ring. There are several suburbs, the most attractive being La Caleta and Limonar. The principal manufactures are textiles, rope, paper, leather, and soap; here are also a royal cigar-factory, sugar-mills, and iron-foundries. The harbor, formed by several moles, is capable of holding hundreds of merchant ships, and may be entered during any wind. Malaga has a large trade in wines, the finest of which are the Muscatel wines, "Dulce" and "Lágrimas." The cultivation of the vine is now confined chiefly to the Axarquia district and to the Montes de Málaga and Colmenar. The other productions, which are largely exported, are olives (from which fine olive-oil is produced), figs, almonds, raisins, grapes, orange-peel, esparto, and lemons, with lead and iron from neighboring mines. The climate is noted for its equableness and mildness. Malaga is supposed to have been founded by the Phœnicians. It became a possession of Carthage and was an important place under the Romans. The Christians took it from the Moors in 1487.

Malay Archipelago, ma-lā' ar-ke-pel'a-go, called also Indian, Asiatic, and Eastern Archipelago, and Malasia, the most extensive group of islands on the globe; situated to the SE. of Asia, and washed on the W. by the Indian Ocean and on the E. by the Pacific Ocean. The inhabitants are largely of the Malay race. The archipelago, which is rather a political than a geographical unit, comprises Sumatra, Java, Borneo, Celebes, the Philippines, the Moluccas, and the chain of islands (Bali, Lombok, Sumbawa, Flores, Sumba, Timor, Timor Laut, Aru group) which stretch eastward from Java nearly to the island of Papua (New Guinea). The latter are frequently designated the Lesser Sunda Islands. With the exception of the Philippines, which belong to the United States, the islands of Penang, Singapore, and Labuan, and North Borneo, which belong to Great Britain, and the NW. portion of the island of Borneo (containing the states of Sarawak and Brunei, under British protection), practically the whole of this vast archipelago is either really or nominally under the sway of the Netherlands. The Portuguese have also a few small possessions here. Within the limits here pointed out lie some of the largest and finest islands in the world, as Borneo, Sumatra, Java, Celebes, Luzon, etc. Numerous groups are scattered throughout the archipelago, consisting each of hundreds of islands, many of them of great beauty and fertility, but they are still imperfectly known and some of them even avoided by Europeans on account of the piratical habits of the natives.

The Malasian islands are geographically divisible into two groups—the islands lying W. of the Strait of Lombok (Sumatra, Java, Bali, Borneo, and the Philippines), which rise mainly from shallow water and have Asiatic affinities in their faunas, and the islands E. of the strait, which are in the main deep-water islands, and which with respect to their fauna are Australian or Papuan. It is assumed that the islands of the first group were in a comparatively recent geological period united with the Asiatic continent, while those of the second group were part of a "greater" Australia. The line of separation (Strait of Lombok) is frequently designated Wallace's Line, named from the naturalist Alfred Russell Wallace. The island of Celebes, which is largely constructed of ancient schists and crystalline rocks, seems to hold a transitional position between the two groups. The geology of the region is still imperfectly known, but the most marked feature is the large number of active and extinct volcanoes, which are directed in almost linear series through the larger Sunda Islands, and then deflected northward through the Philippines. There are vast volcanic deposits overlying strata of Tertiary Age on some of the islands; the region is probably the most active volcanically of the earth's surface, or was so until the recent developments in the Caribbean region. Among the most famous or distinctive of the volcanoes may be mentioned: Korinchi (or Indrapura), in Sumatra; Papandayang, Semeru, and Tengger (Tengar), in Java; Krakatao, in the Strait of Sunda; Tomboro, in Sumbawa; and Mayón, in the Philippines. Some of these attain to 12,000 feet or more in elevation. The lofty mountain of Borneo, Kina-Balu, which is the culminating point of the archipelago, is seemingly not volcanic. For the physical characteristics, faunas, etc., of the different islands, see the special articles Borneo, Sumatra, Philippines, etc.

The principal entrances to the Malay Archipelago from the E. are Gilolo Passage and Dampier Strait, off the coast of Papua, and the Molucca Strait; while the straits of Malacca and of Sunda give access from the W., and the straits of Lombok, Allas, Sapi, Ombai, etc., from the S. The archipelago lies for the most part close to the equator, which passes through Sumatra, Borneo, Celebes, and Gilolo (Halmahera). This entire region is excepted from the general law of the trade-winds. Within the archipelago, and thence W. to the coast of Africa, the monsoons prevail, blowing alternately from the SE. and NW. But these winds, though locally regular and constant, vary much from place to place, and E. of Celebes the seasons are reversed. The northern Philippine Islands alone fall within the region of hurricanes and boisterous winds.

Inhabitants.—The two dominant aboriginal races of the Malay Archipelago are the Malays, a people of brown color, short stature, and lank black hair, and the Papuan (or Negrillo) race, an inferior people of a sooty black color, whose chief home is Papua. The Philippines are inhabited by peoples of black and Malay stock, the ethnologic affinities of many of the tribes being still undetermined. An unusually large proportion of the whole population have maritime habits. Their chief towns are in many instances built over the water, the bamboo houses being constructed on stakes. The natives are skilful boat-builders, and their prahoos, often of 60 tons burden, are excellent specimens of naval architecture.

Malay Peninsula, called also Malacca (anc. Chersone'sus Au'rea), the most southern portion of continental Asia, forming the S. part of the peninsula of Farther India and extending from Indo-China south and southeast towards Sumatra. The peninsula begins geographically at the head of the Gulf of Siam, in lat. 13° 30′ N., and extends to lat. 1° 10′ N., a distance of about 850 miles. The width varies from 50 miles at the Isthmus of Kra (where the elevation has been reduced to about 80 feet), in the north-central part, to 210 miles at Perak, in the south. The area is about 90,000 sq. m. The physical features consist of magnificently wooded mountain-ranges in the interior, running parallel to the coasts, rising to 7000–8000 feet, and flanked on either side by low fertile plains, which in turn are flanked by mangrove swamps extending to the sea. Gunung-Tahan, in the SE., has an altitude of about 7850 ft. Numerous islands lie along the coast, among them the Mergui Archipelago, Salang, Penang, Singapore, and Bintang (the last belonging to Sumatra). The rivers are short and of little use for navigation. The Malay Peninsula is noted for its valuable woods, among which are camphor, cinnamon, cocoa-palm, ebony, rattan, sandal-wood, teak, etc. It has vast riches in its tin, exporting more than one-half of the world's annual product of that metal. Gold, silver, iron, and coal also abound. The wild animals embrace the tiger, rhinoceros, tapir, elephant, hog, buffalo, monkeys, etc., and there are many beautiful birds. Rice, pepper, sugar-cane, cotton, tobacco, coffee, cacao, tea, tapioca, yams, batatas, and the areca are the chief cultivated crops. Gums are exported in large quantities. The population is variously estimated at from 1,000,000 to 2,000,000. The inhabitants are mainly Siamese in the north, civilized Malays along the coast and in the south, and uncivilized Malays mixed with aboriginal Negrito tribes in the interior. There are many Chinese in the coast districts. Politically, Malacca is divided between Siam and the British territories and protectorates or dependencies, embracing half of Tenasserim, the Straits Settlements (Singapore, Penang, Malacca), the Federated Malay States (Perak, Selangor, Negri Sembilan, Pahang), and Johore.

Malay States, Federated, a group of states in the southern part of the Malay Peninsula, under British protection and in political connection with the Straits Settlements. They include Perak, Selangor, Negri Sembilan, and Pahang. Negri Sembilan is a federation of several states (Sungei Ujong, Johol, Jelebu, etc.). The Federated Malay States have a total area of about 28,000 sq. m. Pop. in 1901, 678,595, including 312,486 Malays, 299,739 Chinese, 58,211 natives of India, and 1422 Europeans and Americans. The Chinese and natives of India come and go in great numbers. These regions yield vast quantities of tin and are rich in gold. The vegetable products include pepper, coffee, sugar, rice, tapioca, rubber, and gambier. The forests yield valuable timber. The commerce is very extensive and is facilitated by several hundred miles of railway. The largest town is Kuala Lumpur, in Selangor. (See the articles on the various states.)

Malta, mawl'tạ (It. pron. mål'tå; anc. Mel'ita), an island in the Mediterranean, 56 miles S. of Sicily and 187 miles N. of Africa. It is the principal member of the Maltese group of islands (comprising Gozo, Comino, and some islets), which has an area of 117 sq. m. and which belongs to Great Britain. Lat. about 35° 50′ N.; lon. 14° 30′ E. Greatest length, 17 miles; central breadth, about 9 miles. Area, 95 sq. m. It is of an irregular and oval shape, deeply indented on all sides except the S. The largest bays are those of Marsa-Sirocco on the SE. and Melleha and St. Paul's on the NW.; but the most important in every respect is the double bay formed by the opposite sides of the peninsula on which the capital, Valetta, stands. The SW. coast is very bold. The surface is very much broken by rocks. The culminating point, near the SW. coast, does not exceed 1200 feet. The rocks are all stratified and consist of limestones, fossiliferous sandstones, and clays. There are numerous caverns. The climate from the middle of October till January is delightful, but in summer the heat becomes extreme and the reflection from the bare white rocks often injures the sight. The air is usually dry and clear and the island is much frequented as a health-station. There are no lakes or real running streams in the island, but the springs are numerous and copious. The natural soil is very thin and scanty, but through the industrious energy of the inhabitants in powdering up the surface-rock much adapted soil has been constructed and about two-thirds of the former "barren lands" are now under beautiful cultivation. The staple products are corn and cotton; the vine and olive are cultivated. Fruits, particularly figs, lemons, and oranges, are abundant and of excellent flavor. The central position of Malta in the Mediterranean makes it an important commercial depôt and a valuable naval station. It has in consequence received great attention from the British government and been provided with excellent docks and strong fortifications. The natives are of mixed descent. The language of the country people is largely made up of Arabic elements, though the grammatical construction resembles that of the Italian. The educated classes speak Italian, and English is spoken by many. Malta belonged successively to the Phœnicians, Greeks, and Carthaginians, and became a possession of Rome during the second Punic War. In the fifth century it was seized by the Vandals, Goths, and Greeks, and in the ninth century it was taken from the Greeks by the Saracens. From the last it passed to Sicily, whose fortunes it followed till 1530, when Charles V. granted it to the Order of St. John of Jerusalem (Knights of Malta). In 1565 the knights under La Valette withstood a tremendous siege at the hands of the Turks. In 1798 the grand-master surrendered Malta to Napoleon. In 1800 it fell into the hands of the English. The island is administered by a governor, who is assisted by an executive council of 6 official and 13 elected members. Pop. in 1900, 183,679.

Man, Isle of (anc. Mona'pia), an island in the Irish Sea, 30 miles W. of England, 32 miles E. of Ireland, and 15 miles S. of Scotland. Lat. about 54° N. Extreme length, about 32 miles, with an irregular breadth varying from 6 to 12 miles. Area, 227 sq. m. Mountains extend nearly through the entire length of the island and culminate in the Snaefell, 2030 feet. The island is well watered. The principal streams are the Neb, at Peel, the Colby, near Ramsay, and the Black and Gray Waters, near Douglas. Some of the valleys have rich pastures and, where the land is somewhat level, grain is cultivated. Copper, lead, and zinc are mined, the lead-mines of Laxey being very productive in silver.

The island is chiefly peopled by the Manx (Menaviæ), of the Celtic race. In the Middle Ages it had for long periods kings of its own, first a Welsh and then a Scandinavian dynasty. At the beginning of the fifteenth century it was erected into a feudal principality for the Stanley family (from which have sprung the earls of Derby). Early in the nineteenth century the island reverted by purchase to the English crown. The legislative authority is principally vested in the House of Keys, a self-perpetuating body. The governor is named by the crown. The Manx language is still in common use, although the inhabitants speak English. The island forms the Anglican diocese of Sodor and Man. Principal towns are Douglas (the capital), Castletown, Peel, and Ramsay. Pop. in 1901, 54,758.

Manchester, a city, municipal, parliamentary, and county borough, and inland port of England, within the territorial limits of Lancashire, on the Irwell, a tributary of the Mersey, here joined by the Medlock and the Irk, 164 miles NNW. of London. Manchester proper lies on the left bank of the Irwell, but the borough of Salford on the opposite side is practically a portion of the city. The vast manufacturing industries are rapidly being relegated to the suburbs, the main portion of the city being now devoted to trade and finance. The business streets of Manchester present a stately architectural appearance. The principal ecclesiastical buildings are the cathedral, dating mainly from the early part of the fifteenth century, and the Catholic church of the Holy Name. St. John's Catholic cathedral is located at Salford. The secular edifices of most interest are the Gothic town-hall, one of the most superb modern buildings in England, with a tower 260 feet in height, the Royal Infirmary, Chetham College, the new buildings of Victoria University, the Royal Institution, the Free Trade Hall, containing an immense auditorium, the Assize Courts, and the Exchange, with a Corinthian portico and a campanile. Among the public monuments are a memorial to Prince Albert in Albert Square, a bronze statue of Richard Cobden in St. Anne's Square, and statues of Queen Victoria and Cromwell. At the head of the educational institutions of Manchester is Victoria University (formerly Owens College), the number of whose students is about 1150, including about 200 women. Other educational institutions are an ancient grammar-school, of which De Quincey was an alumnus, Chetham College or Hospital, a Blue Coat school, with what is reputed to be the oldest free library in Europe (containing 40,000 volumes), the public library, with 300,000 volumes, Ryland's Library, containing 70,000 volumes, the Manchester Art Museum, the Royal Manchester College of Music, and technical and industrial schools, for the most part under the direction of the municipality. Manchester has an extensive system of parks, among which are Heaton Park, some miles from the city, and Peel and Whitworth parks, both in Salford. The municipality of Manchester has long been noted for its progressiveness. The city owns the oldest municipal gas-works in the world. Among the municipal activities may be mentioned the erection of dwellings for workingmen and the establishment of great public bathing-places. The water-supply of Manchester is in part drawn from Lake Thirlmere, distant about 100 miles. In 1894 a gigantic undertaking was brought to completion in the opening of the Manchester Ship Canal connecting Manchester with the Mersey at Eastham, and thus making of the city a port accessible to the largest ocean steamers. This magnificent artificial water-way, constructed at a cost of $75,000,000, is 35½ miles in length and 26 feet in depth, and is wider than the Suez Canal. It has 5 locks. Manchester is the greatest industrial town of England and the centre of the cotton manufacture of the kingdom. In addition to the establishments connected with the textile industry there are manufactories of every description, including machine-shops, iron-, steel- and chemical-works, and paper-mills. Manchester returns 6 and Salford 3 members to parliament. The city is noted as the cradle of the Anti-Corn Law and Free Trade movements in England.

Manchester grew to be a flourishing little town in the Middle Ages. An influx of immigrants from the Netherlands in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries promoted its prosperity. At the beginning of the eighteenth century it had still only about 10,000 inhabitants. By 1801 the population had risen to 75,000. In 1830 the Manchester and Liverpool railway, the first railway in which passenger transportation on a large scale was inaugurated, was opened for traffic. With the rapid development of the cotton-industry the population grew at an extraordinary rate. In 1851 it amounted to 303,000, in 1891 it had reached 505,368, and in 1901 it was 543,872. The population of Salford in 1901 was 220,956.

Manchuria, man-choo're-a (Chinese, Tung-san-sheng,—i.e., the "Three Eastern Provinces"), an extensive region of eastern Asia, forming the northeasternmost division of the Chinese Empire, between (approx.) lat. 39° and 53° 30′ N., and having broadly Korea and the Yellow Sea on the S., Mongolia and the Russian territories on the W., and the Russian Amur province and Primorskaya on the N. and E. Area, about 360,000 sq. m. The western boundaries have not been precisely fixed, but are now generally placed so as to include the main Khingan mountains within the territory. The greater portion of the N. boundary is formed by the Amur and Argun rivers. From Korea the region is separated by the Yalu and Tyumen rivers and the Pai-shan mountains (rising to 8000 feet). The chief interior stream is the Sungari (an affluent of the Amur), which, with its tributary the Nonni, is freely navigated by Russian steamers. Most of the Manchurian region is mountainous, but a portion on the N. has a steppe character. The climate is on the whole healthy and invigorating, although showing extremes of temperature, from —20° or even —50° in winter to 90° and more in summer. The soil is highly productive and yields most of the Chinese crops (millet, wheat, barley, rice, corn, beans, pease, potatoes, tobacco, rhubarb, ginseng, cotton, hemp, etc.). Forests of pine, oak, elm, and walnut cover a large part of the region. The fauna includes a number of the fur-bearing animals (sable, etc.), the bear and tiger. Among the mineral resources gold and coal are attracting considerable attention. The region is traversed by the Transsiberian railway. Manchuria consists of three provinces, Liao-tung (or Shing-king), Kirin, and Tsitsikhar (Hei-lung-kiang), in the last two of which the inhabitants are largely nomadic. The population is variously estimated at from 5,500,000 to 17,000,000. The great bulk of the inhabitants are Chinese. The Manchus are a Tungusian race. Since the middle of the seventeenth century the Manchu dynasty has reigned in China, and the Manchu tongue, otherwise little spoken and almost extinct, has become the court and the official language. Principal towns, Mukden, Kirin, Aigun, Harbin, Kin-chow, Feng-hwang-cheng, Niu-chwang, and Port Arthur at the extremity of the peninsula of Liao-tung. In 1898 Russia obtained from the Chinese government a lease of the harbors of Port Arthur and Ta-lien-wan, together with the neighboring district. At Port Arthur a great fortified naval station was established, and at the port of Ta-lien-wan the town of Dalny was founded, intended to be a great outlet of Russian commerce. The convulsions in China attending the Boxer movement of 1900 invited an advance of Russia into Manchuria. Her forces occupied the country, from which she refused to withdraw. The encroachments of Russia involved her in a disastrous war with Japan in 1904. Dalny, with its costly harbor-works, Port Arthur, and Mukden fell into the hands of the enemy. By the terms of the treaty of Portsmouth, Sept. 5, 1905, Russia was obliged to withdraw from Manchuria.

Lat. of observatory, 14° 34′ 41″ N.; lon. 120° 58′ 33″ E. The Pásig is prolonged into the bay by two piers, terminating, the one in a small fort, the other in a lighthouse. On the S. side of the river stands the city proper (ciudad murada, or "walled town"), strongly fortified, sombre and dull, without places of recreation, except the gardens in the public squares. Here reside the authorities and here are located the cathedral, the principal institutions of learning, etc. The streets are straight, well paved, and lighted by electricity; the main street is the Calle Real. The city and suburbs are served by tram-cars. A railroad connects Manila with Dagupan. The water-supply is pure and abundant. The best houses have usually but one story above the ground floor, the upper portion, owing to earthquake destructions, being built generally of wood. On the N. side of the Pásig is the Binondo suburb, more populous than the city itself; it is the great centre of trade. Bridges connect it with the city proper. The chief street is the Escuelta, much improved of late years, having good European shops and the central post-office and telegraph-station. In Binondo Chinese, half-castes, and Indians do boot- and furniture-making, book-binding, painting and enamelling, gold- and silver-smithing, etc. In the Tondo ward live the poorest working classes,—fishermen, day-laborers, canoemen, weavers, etc. San Miguel is a fashionable residence quarter. Other suburbs have distinct characteristics. Good bridges facilitate their connection with the city. Santa Ana and San Pedro Macati are health-resorts for convalescents.

The principal public buildings of Manila are the cathedral, palaces of the governor and the archbishop, the townhouse, churches of the different religious orders, monasteries, convents, arsenal, barracks, supreme court, prison, civil and military hospitals, and custom-house; there are no theatres of importance, but there are cock-pits, cafés, riding-school and race-course, etc. The city has several public squares, with gardens, the foremost of which are the Prado, which has a bronze statue of Charles IV., and the Paseo or Plaza de Magallanes, with an obelisk erected to the memory of Magellan. The Luneta is a favorite promenade. A telephone system is established in the city and the environs.

The educational institutions include the University of San Tomas, under the Dominicans, attended by about 1200 students; the Jesuit college of San José; the Dominican college of San Juan de Letrán; colleges for girls, the municipal athenæum, with a physical laboratory, natural history museum, and fine astronomical apparatus, etc. There is a meteorological observatory. New educational institutions and bureaus are being established under the American government. Manila is the commercial and industrial metropolis of the Philippine Islands. It has steam communication with the principal maritime ports of the world. The exports are sugar, abacá, sapan-wood, coffee, cigars and tobacco, hides, indigo, gum mastic, cordage, mother-of-pearl shell, etc., amounting to about 80 per cent. of the whole trade of the Philippines. The leading industry is the manufacture of cigars and cheroots, in which many thousand hands are employed. Other manufactures are cordage, fabrics of abacá (sinamay, etc.), pine-apple-leaf fibre (piñas), and pure or mixed cotton goods, mats, carpets, metal goods, and cigar-cases. There are also sugar-refineries, breweries, and manufactures of machinery. The climate of Manila is enervatingly tropical, and generally uniform in temperature, which, as a mean for the year, is about 80°.

Manila was founded by Legazpi in 1571. In 1762 it was taken by a British fleet and held for 15 months. The bay was the scene of the first naval battle of the Spanish-American War of 1898, in which Dewey destroyed a Spanish fleet (May 1). The city surrendered to the United States forces on Aug. 13 of the same year. Pop. in 1900, 190,714; in 1903 (official census), 219,928. The bulk of the inhabitants are Tagalogs. The Chinese number about 60,000. The city was largely wrecked by an earthquake on June 3, 1863, when upward of 1000 buildings were destroyed.

Manitoba, a province of Canada, is bounded on the S. by Minnesota and North Dakota, NE. by Keewatin, E. by Ontario, and W. and NW. by Assiniboia and Saskatchewan. Area, 73,950 sq. m. A considerable part of the province is prairie-land, perfectly level and diversified by groups of elm, ash, oak, poplar, basswood, and ash-leaf maple. The Pembina Mountains occupy the SW. and W. portions. The soil, which in great part is derived from the alluvium of the (extinguished) Quaternary Lake Agassiz, is among the richest of the world and magnificently adapted to the cultivation of wheat.

The principal rivers are the Red River, which falls into the S. extremity of Lake Winnipeg, and its affluent, the Assiniboin. The largest lakes (only a part of whose area, however, is in Manitoba) are Winnipeg, 280 miles long and 5 to 50 miles wide; Manitoba, 110 miles long and 25 miles wide; and Winnipegosis.

The climate of Manitoba, though very severe in winter, is occasionally hot in summer. The mean for the three winter months of December, January, and February is 5° below zero, and for the summer months of June, July, and August, 65°. The low temperature of the winter is offset by a clear, dry atmosphere and the season is very healthy. The extremes are —40° and 95°. Wheat ripens in 110 days and gives an average return of 20 to 25 bushels to the acre. All kinds of garden vegetables, as well as oats, barley, Indian corn, hops, flax, hemp, potatoes, and other root-crops, are easily raised. The chief agricultural crops were in 1901: wheat, 53,077,267 bushels; and oats, 34,478,160. The grassy savannas of the Red River afford magnificent pasturage. Lignitic coal is found and the Archæan mountains give promise of considerable mineral wealth. The public affairs are administered by a lieutenant-governor, an executive council, and a legislative assembly elected by the people. Capital, Winnipeg. Pop. in 1871, 25,228; in 1881, 62,260; in 1891, 154,442; in 1901, 254,947.

This section of North America was first visited by the French. The Chevalier de la Vérandrye built a fort at the mouth of the Assiniboin in 1731. The French traded there alone for many years, but in 1767 the first English traders visited the region, and soon several rival companies were in operation. The Hudson Bay Company having in 1811 sold a tract of land to the earl of Selkirk, on both sides of the Assiniboin and of the Red River, he planted there in 1812 a colony known by the name of Selkirk Settlement, Red River Settlement, or Assiniboia. In 1836 the Hudson Bay Company repurchased the land from the heirs of Lord Selkirk. This colony, the seat of whose administration was Fort Garry, became the nucleus of the province of Manitoba. In 1869 the Hudson Bay Company transferred to the imperial government their territorial rights and governing responsibilities, and in 1870 England handed over the whole to the Canadian government. The entry of Manitoba into the Confederation was effected in 1870.

It is surrounded by swamps and lake-like tracts of water (Lago Superiore, Lago di Mezzo, Lago Inferiore), and connected by artificial dams with several fortified suburbs and outworks. The principal public buildings are the cathedral of San Pietro, the church of Sant' Andrea (with a white marble façade), various private palaces, the Corte Reale, formerly the palace of the Gonzagas (with splendid interior decorations, including frescoes by Giulio Romano), the Palazzo Vecchio, in which Napoleon held his court, the Castello di Corte, or castle of the Gonzagas (with frescoes by Mantegna), and (just outside of the walls), the Palazzo del Tè, designed by Giulio Romano. Mantua possesses a large public library, a lyceum, various museums, a botanic garden, and a Vergilian Academy of Arts and Sciences. The town is not an important industrial or trading centre. Mantua is said to have been founded by the Etruscans before the building of Rome. It became a Roman municipium in the first century B.C. In the neighboring village of Andes Vergil was born. Mantua rose to importance at the time when the cities of northern Italy began successfully to assert their independence of the German emperors, and was a member of the Lombard League. The Gonzagas ruled the city and its territory from the early part of the fourteenth century for nearly 400 years. In the fifteenth century their little state became a marquisate and from 1530 the rulers bore the title of duke. The Gonzagas distinguished themselves by the splendor of their court and their patronage of literature and art. Upon the death of the last duke, in 1708, the duchy was annexed to Austria. Bonaparte took Mantua in 1797 after a memorable siege. Austria recovered possession of it in 1814. In 1866 the city and district were united with Italy.

Marseilles, mar-sâlz' (Fr. Marseille, mar'sâ'y'; L. Massil'ia; Gr. Μασσαλία, Massalia), a city of France, capital of the department of Bouches-du-Rhône (Provence), the second city in population and the most important seaport of the republic, is situated at the head of a finely-sheltered bay on the NE. side of the Gulf of Lyons, 200 miles SE. of Lyons. Lat. of observatory, 43° 18′ 18″ N.; lon. 5° 23′ 40″ E. It is built at the foot of a hill, around which a semicircular chain of loftier hills rises at a short distance, leaving the view open to the sea. Two main lines of imposing boulevards intersect near the centre of the city in the Cours St. Louis, bearing, as in Paris, different names in different parts. The longest of these, in part the Rue de Rome, and continued beyond the Place de Castellane as the magnificent Prado, has a length of over 3 miles and traverses the Place d'Aix, Cours St. Louis, Place de Rome, and Place de Castellane. The most attractive of the streets are the Rue Cannebière and Rue Noailles (continued as the Boulevard de la Madeleine), whose cafés rival those of Paris. The public edifices most deserving of notice are the cathedral (Ste. Marie Majeure), a large neo-Byzantine structure erected in 1852–93, and measuring 460 feet in length; the episcopal palace; the Palais de Justice; the church of St. Victor, of great antiquity, erected on the site of a grotto, or cavern, in which the first Christians were accustomed to meet in secret for worship; the Hôtel de Ville; the prefecture, a large edifice, erected in 1861–67; the bourse, with a fine meeting-hall of the chamber of commerce; the Palais de Longchamp (1862–69), with museums of paintings and natural history; the post-office (1889–91); the observatory, library, and theatres. The triumphal arch is a notable structure. The quays, lined with commodious warehouses, have a length of over 1½ miles and flank the several basins (Bassin National, Lazaret, Joliette, Avant-Port, Bassin Sud, Vieux-Port, etc.) which unite to form the busy harbor.

Marseilles possesses faculties of science and of medicine (university of Aix-Marseilles), a naval observatory, academies and societies of sciences, belles-lettres, arts, and of medicine, a school of hydrography, schools of art, industry, and music, a municipal library of over 100,000 volumes, botanical garden, museum of natural history, zoological garden, etc. Its lazaretto is one of the largest in the world. Marseilles has manufactures of soap (made here more extensively than in any other city of the world), furniture, spirits, leather, chemicals, and tobacco, oil- and flour-mills, sugar-refineries, ship-building yards, naval-equipment establishments, machine-shops, petroleum-refineries, etc.

The harbor, which is one of the finest in France, is secure in all weathers and possesses extensive anchorage for vessels in from 18 to 24 feet of water. It is defended by fortifications. With respect to the amount of tonnage owned, Marseilles holds the first rank among the seaports of the republic. Its foreign commerce exceeds that of every other port in France and its coast-wise trade is very great. The chief articles of export include cereals, soap, wine, fruits, oil-seeds, coal, textiles, sugar, coffee, hides, candles, wool, and silk, and sheep from Algeria. The trade is mainly with the Mediterranean countries, but extends to all parts of the world. There are steamship lines to Asia, the E. and W. coasts of Africa, and to South America.

Marseilles appears to have been founded by the Phœnicians, but about 600 B.C. the Phœnician settlement was supplanted by a colony from the Greek city of Phocæa, in Asia Minor. Massalia, as the Greek city was called (L. Massilia), rose to be a great commercial commonwealth and a centre of intellectual activity. In the first century B.C. it was swallowed up in the Roman world. During a great part of the Middle Ages it was more or less independent. In 1481 Provence, and with it Marseilles, were united with the French crown. Pop. in 1862, 260,910; in 1881, 269,340; in 1891, 403,749; in 1901, 491,161. Martinique, mar'tin-eek', formerly called by the natives Madiana, må-de-å'nå (Sp. Martinico, mar-te-nee'-ko), one of the French West India Islands, 30 miles S. by W. of Dominica and 20 miles N. of St. Lucia. It is of irregular form, high and rocky, about 39 miles long and 10 to 15 miles broad. Area, 380 sq. m. It is almost entirely of volcanic construction, with several well-marked groups or knots of volcanic mountains (mornes, pitons), as the Diamant, Vauclin (1656 feet), Pitons de Carbet (3955 ft.), and Mont (or Montagne) Pelée (lat. 14° 48′ N.), the loftiest peak of the island, which, before the catastrophic eruption of May 8, 1902 (which destroyed the city of Saint-Pierre and about 30,000 inhabitants), had an altitude of 4438 (or 4250?) ft., rose in 1903 in its extruded tower of rock to a height of 5200 ft., and has now an altitude of about 4500 ft. (See PELÉE.) Extensive masses of volcanic rocks cover the interior and extend from the mountains to the shores of the sea, where they form numerous deep indentations along the coast. Between the volcanic rocks occur broad irregular valleys of great fertility. There are some raised beaches, dating back to a comparatively recent period. About two-fifths of the island is under cultivation. The mountain-slopes are in some parts still covered with nearly virgin forests. Numerous streams flow from the heights, most of them mere rivulets, but a few (Lamantin) are navigable for boats for a short distance from their mouths. The productions are sugar, coffee, cacao, and tobacco, the principal resource of the colony being the cultivation of the cane. The island, which is traversed by excellent roads, was formerly infested by serpents (fer-de-lance). The most distinctive element in the indigenous mammalian fauna of the island is the opossum. The climate is on the whole salubrious and the heat is measurably tempered by the steadily blowing trade-winds. Annual precipitation, about 90 inches.

Martinique has several good harbors, the best of which is at Fort-de-France, the capital, on the SW. side. The principal town, prior to May, 1902, was Saint-Pierre, on the NW. side of the island. Other towns are Marin, Galion, Robert, Trinité, Marigot, Grand Anse, Basse-Pointe, Grande Rivière, etc. The administration of Martinique is under a governor and a general council. The island was discovered by the Spaniards in 1493. In 1635 it was settled by the French, whose cruel treatment eventually exterminated the aboriginal race. It was taken by the British in 1794 and restored in 1802; it was again taken by the British in 1809, and restored a second time to France in 1814. The island has been at different times visited by tornadoes and earthquakes. In 1902, by the catastrophic eruptions of May 8 and Aug. 30, Pelée established a record of volcanic destructivity perhaps not surpassed by any other volcano. Pop. in 1903 about 175,000, chiefly blacks or mixtures of blacks, Creoles, and Indians. The island is represented in the French legislature by 1 senator and 2 deputies.

Maryland (named in honor of Queen Henrietta Maria, consort of Charles I.), one of the Middle Atlantic states of the American Union and one of the original thirteen states, is bounded N. by Pennsylvania, E. by Delaware and the Atlantic Ocean, and S., SW., and W. by Virginia, West Virginia, and the District of Columbia, from the two former of which it is for the most part separated by the Potomac River. It is of very irregular outline, and Chesapeake Bay and the Susquehanna River divide the main body of the state into two portions,—the Eastern and the Western Shore. There are some small islands in the bay and off the Atlantic coast, nearly all in close proximity to the Eastern Shore. Area, of the land surface, 9860 sq. m.; of the appertaining waters, about 2400 sq. m. The N. limit is "Mason and Dixon's line," 39° 43′ 26″ N. lat.

Face of the Country.—The Eastern Shore is a level, sandy, but mainly fertile region, nowhere of great elevation, though in the N. there are finely rounded hills, while southward there are swampy tracts and patches of woodland, consisting largely of red-cedar, cypress, and white-oak; and the streams, though not large, are to a remarkable degree deep and navigable. W. of the bay the surface is in general similar to that just described, but more uneven and varied in character, as far NW. as the low ridge which extends SW. from the Susquehanna at the Pennsylvania state line to a point near Rockville, on the Potomac. This is the southeasternmost geographical (although not geological) representative of the parallel ridges of the Alleghany system, numbers of which cross the W. half of the state, for the most part in steep and bold ridges, with wide and exceedingly fertile intervening valleys. In the extreme W. the beautiful elevated valleys are known as "glades." The principal of the traversing heights and ridges, passing from E. to W., are known locally as Catoctin, South, North, Green, Warrior's, Martin's, Nichols, Piney, Great Savage, Great Backbone, Meadow, Negro, and Winding ridges or mountains, the more defined of which have direct continuations NE. in Pennsylvania and SW. in Virginia and West Virginia (South Mountain as the extension of the Blue Ridge and North Mountain as the continuation of the Kittatinny or Blue Mountain). The highest elevations of the state exceed but little, if at all, 3000 feet. Samson Rock lies at an altitude of 2942 feet; Dan's Rock, W. of Cumberland, is 2882 feet high. The western section is traversed by the "great valley," which has its continuation in the N. in the Cumberland Valley of Pennsylvania and in the S. in the Shenandoah Valley of West Virginia and Virginia.

Rivers and Navigable Waters.—The Potomac is navigated by sea-going vessels as far as Georgetown, D.C., from which point the navigation on internal waters was extended in the first half of the nineteenth century by the construction of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal to the western parts of the state. This canal was at one time of great benefit to the whole Atlantic seaboard, bringing down much coal and iron, etc., at very cheap rates. The Chesapeake Bay affords a great extent of safely navigable water and into it flow the Patuxent, Patapsco, Severn, Gunpowder, Elk, Chester, Choptank, Nanticoke, Pocomoke, and other navigable streams, besides the Susquehanna, only a few miles of whose course is within the state and which is not extensively navigated. The Delaware and Chesapeake Canal connects the navigable waters of the state with Delaware Bay and the Susquehanna and Tidewater Canal follows the W. bank of the Susquehanna.

Geology.—The S. half of the Eastern Shore is alluvial and Post-Tertiary; its central and north-central portions are Tertiary; and the N. is of Cretaceous age, the narrow Cretaceous belt extending southwestward to the District of Columbia and having on its SE. flank a wide area of the Tertiary. NW. of the Cretaceous appears a wide belt referred to the Laurentian or Eozoic age, but overlaid along its centre by a strip of the Triassic crossing the state, all these belts and strips having more or less of the general NE. and SW. direction of the mountains and the Atlantic coast. The Alleghanies proper are constructed of Silurian, Devonian, and Carboniferous strata, and carry in their newer members important deposits of coal. Practically all the coal of the state is mined in but two counties, Allegany and Garrett, and from the three basins known as the Cumberland, George's Creek, and Frostburg. The output in 1903 was 4,846,165 short tons. The measures also yield useful clay-ironstone and black-band ores and iron shales of fair quality. Brown hematite and various other ores of iron are found. The state has large deposits of excellent fire-clays and is noted for the fine quality of its manufactured bricks. Marble, granite (Port Deposit), serpentine, and other building-stones, limestone for burning, and roofing-slate are among the quarry products. Kaolin, lignite, iron-pyrites, amber, alum, ochres, ores of chromium, hone-stone, millstones, cements, breccia, valuable (glauconitic and other) marls, barytes, gypsum, magnesite, etc., occur in varying degrees of abundance.

Agricultural Resources, etc.—Wheat, corn, oats, tobacco, live-stock, wool, pork, sweet and other potatoes, various fruits (especially peaches), garden-produce, and butter are the staple products. The chief agricultural crops of the state in 1900 were: corn, 15,232,802 bushels; wheat, 15,187,848 bushels; oats, 1,783,416 bushels; rye, 408,028 bushels; potatoes, 1,269,455 bushels; and hay, 302,292 tons. The Eastern Shore has particularly developed into a region of fruit cultivation. The climate of eastern Maryland is singularly mild for its latitude and most parts of the state are healthful, except that malarial fevers prevail near the marshy tracts.

Manufactures, Forest Products.—The manufacturing interests of the state are varied and have their chief seat in the city of Baltimore and its vicinity. Boots and shoes, bricks, cement, lime, chemicals, clothing, barrels, cotton and woollen goods and other textiles, canned goods (fruits, vegetables, meats, and oysters), flour, furniture, leather, lumber, machinery, and metallic wares are leading articles of manufacture. The manufacture of iron, steel, and tobacco, and slaughtering have risen to be leading industries. Shipbuilding is still carried on on a fairly extensive scale. The value of the products of some of the leading industries was in 1900: fruit and vegetables (canned and preserved), $11,996,245; tobacco, $9,896,928; slaughtering, $8,046,359; flouring- and grist-mill products, $7,155,722; iron and steel, $8,739,405; fertilizers, $5,481,905. There were, in 1900, 42 grain and fruit distilleries in operation.

The forest products are mainly oak for ship-timber, ash, hickory, cedar, and cypress shingles, tanners' bark, sumach leaves for tanning, charcoal, and firewood.

Fisheries, etc.—The oyster-fisheries of Maryland are more extensive than those of any other state, the sounds, inlets, bays, and estuaries of the coasts being a favorite habitat of the oyster; and so extensive is this business that the state has been obliged to enact a series of statutes and to maintain a fleet of armed vessels for its regulation. The shad- and other fisheries are also important and lucrative. The canvas-back duck haunts the marshes of this state, where its special food, a species of Vallisneria, gives to the bird's flesh its peculiar celery flavor so much esteemed by epicures. Reed-birds, wild-geese, rails, snipe, and grouse haunt the waste lands, old fields, and marshes and afford autumnal occupation for the sportsman. The soft-shelled crabs and terrapins of the Baltimore markets are celebrated for their excellence.

Railroads.—The construction of the Baltimore and Ohio R., the pioneer of the great railway lines of America, was begun in 1828. In 1830 the state had 15 miles of railroad; in 1846 (including the District of Columbia), 259 miles; in 1855, 327 miles; in 1860, 386 miles; in 1870, 671 miles; in 1880, 1040 miles; in 1890, 1270 miles; and in 1900, 1359 miles.

Counties.—Maryland has 23 counties, besides the independent city of Baltimore. They are Allegany, Anne Arundel, Baltimore, Calvert, Caroline, Carroll, Cecil, Charles, Dorchester, Frederick, Garrett, Harford, Howard, Kent, Montgomery, Prince George, Queen Anne, St. Mary, Somerset, Talbot, Washington, Wicomico, and Worcester.

Cities and Towns.—The principal cities and towns include Baltimore, the metropolis (pop. in 1900, 508,957); Annapolis, the state capital (8402); Cumberland (17,128); Hagerstown (13,591); Frederick (9296); Cambridge (5747); Frostburg, Salisbury, Westminster, Havre de Grace, Crisfield, and Easton.

Education.—The public school system of Baltimore was first legally established in 1827. There is a state normal school in that city and another at Frostburg, and training-schools elsewhere. There are colleges at Baltimore, Frederick, Chestertown (Washington College), Emmittsburg (Mount St. Mary's College, St. Joseph's Academy), New Windsor, Westminster (Western Maryland College), Annapolis, Ellicott City (Rock Hill and St. Charles Colleges), and other points. The leading institution of learning of the state and one of the foremost centres of higher education in the United States is the Johns Hopkins University, of Baltimore. The national naval academy and St. John's College are located at Annapolis, and the state agricultural college at College Park. The Jacob Tome Institute at Port Deposit is a secondary school on a splendid scale. The city of Baltimore contains the University of Maryland, the Maryland Institute, the Peabody Institute, Woman's College, and Bryn Mawr School.

Government.—The governor is chosen for a term of four years. The general assembly consists of a Senate and a House of Delegates. The senators are elected for 4 years and the delegates for 2 years. The state sends 6 members to the lower house of the national Congress.

Population.—The population in 1660 was 12,000; in 1671, 20,000; in 1753, 154,188; in 1790, 319,728; in 1800, 341,548; in 1810, 380,546; in 1820, 407,350; in 1830, 447,040; in 1840, 470,019; in 1850, 583,034; in 1860, 687,049, of whom 515,918 were white, 83,941 free colored, and 87,189 slaves; in 1870, 780,894; in 1880, 934,943; in 1890, 1,042,390; in 1900, 1,190,050 (235,064 colored). The foreign-born population numbers less than 10 per cent.

History.—Maryland had its first settlement on Kent Island in 1631 and was colonized in 1634 by English Roman Catholics under Leonard Calvert, a brother of Lord Baltimore, the patentee and proprietor. The first settlement under the patent was at St. Mary's. In 1649 religious toleration was enacted for members of all Christian sects and churches excepting those who denied the Trinity. For many years the colony was distracted by contests between the proprietary party and turbulent Puritan settlers and others. The Roman Catholics were long debarred from the suffrage and not permitted to worship in public. Baltimore was founded in 1729. In 1776 Maryland constituted itself a state. Maryland remained a slave state until the final abolition of slavery in the United States; but she did not follow the Southern States in their attempted secession, that step having been prevented as much by the strength of the Union party in the state as by the presence of federal troops. Since the Civil War there has been a large immigration from the North and the peach-growing and market-gardening industries of the Eastern Shore have been immensely developed.

Maseru, maz'êr-oo, a district of Basutoland. In the W. part, near the Caledon River, is the town of Maseru, chief settlement of the district and of Basutoland. Pop. about 900 (Europeans, 100). About 20 miles (direct) S. is Morija, the oldest mission station in Basutoland, founded in 1833.

Masham, a small town of England, co. of York, North Riding, on the Ure, 16 miles SSE. of Richmond. Pop. in 1901, 1955.

Masham Mills, a post-village of Wright co., Quebec. Pop. 50.

Mash'apaug', a post-village of Tolland co., Conn., about 36 miles ENE. of Hartford. Pop. about 150.

Mashena, a walled town of Africa, in Bornu, 130 miles NE. of Kano. Pop. about 10,000.

Mashike, a seaport town and port of call of Japan, on the W. coast of Yezo, 130 miles NNE. of Hakodate.

Mashkudens Lake, Minn., is in Itasca co. and is about 8 miles N. of the Mississippi River. Length, about 10 miles. An outlet issues from the S. end and runs into the Mississippi River.

Masho'naland, South Africa, a large tract and one of the two provinces of Southern Rhodesia, within British southern Africa. It is mountainous, with a mean elevation of about 3300 feet, and is intersected by the tributaries of the Sabi and lower Zambezi rivers. The soil is very fertile and is rich in gold and other minerals. The climate is the most healthful of all South Africa, with constant cool breezes. The region contains many ancient ruins, associated with early gold-diggings, 12 miles S. of the township of Victoria. See ZIMBABWE. Pop. about 370,000, of whom, in 1901, 4021 were Europeans. Chief settlement, Salisbury. See RHODESIA.

Mashpee, or Marshpee, a post-township (town) of Barnstable co., Mass., bounded on the S. by the Atlantic Ocean, about 25 miles E. of New Bedford. Pop. in 1900, 303.

Mashulaville, a post-village of Noxubee co., Miss., 12 miles W. of Macon. Pop. about 100.

Masindrano, a town on the E. coast of Madagascar, in about lat. 21° 15′ S.

Maskat, Arabia. See MUSCAT.

Maskegon River. See MUSKEGON RIVER.

Maskinonge, mas'ke-nônj', a river of Berthier co., Quebec, rises in Lake Maskinonge and flows SSE. into the St. Lawrence. About 8 miles from its mouth are the Great Rapids, where there is a fall of more than 300 feet.

Maskinonge, a county in the W. part of Quebec, having Lake St. Peter, an expansion of the St. Lawrence, for its S. boundary. The NW. part is drained by the Gatineau and Du Lièvre rivers and some of their tributaries and the SW. part by the Maskinonge and Du Loup rivers and other streams. Capital, Rivière du Loup en Haut.

Maskinonge, a post-village of Maskinonge co., Quebec, on the St. Lawrence, 30 miles SW. of Three Rivers. Pop. 75.

Maskinonge Bridge. See PONT DE MASKINONGE.

Mask, Lough, a lake of Ireland, cos. of Galway and Mayo, 11 miles S. of Castlebar. Length, 8 miles.

Masmünster (Fr. Massevaux), a small town of Alsace, Germany, situated in the Vosges, 11 miles NE. of Belfort. Pop. in 1900, 3987.

Masnóu, a maritime town of Spain, 10 miles from Barcelona, on the railway to Mataró. Pop. (commune) about 3500.

Mason, a county in the west-central part of Illinois, has an area of 570 sq. m. It is bounded on the N. by the Illinois River and on the S. by the Sangamon River, which enters the Illinois at the SW. extremity of the county, and by Salt Creek. The county has beds of bituminous coal. Capital, Havana. Pop. in 1890, 16,067; in 1900, 17,491.

Mason, a county in the NE. part of Kentucky, has an area of 204 sq. m. It is bounded on the N. by the Ohio River and is intersected by the North Fork of the Licking River. Capital, Maysville. Pop. in 1890, 20,773; in 1900, 20,446.

Mason, a county in the W. part of Michigan, has an area of 501 sq. m. It is bounded on the W. by Lake Michigan and is intersected by the Marquette and Grand Sable rivers. Capital, Ludington. Pop. in 1890, 16,385; in 1900, 18,885.

Mason, a county in the central part of Texas, has an area of 968 sq. m. It is intersected by the Llano and San Saba rivers. Capital, Mason. Pop. in 1890, 5180; in 1900, 5573.

Mason, a county in the W. part of Washington, has an area of 993 sq. m. It is bounded on the E. by Hood's Canal and Puget Sound and on the W. by the Pacific Ocean. It is partly drained by the Satsop and Skokomish rivers. Capital, Shelton. Pop. in 1890, 2826; in 1900, 3810.

Mason, a county in the W. part of West Virginia, borders on the state of Ohio. Area, 457 sq. m. It is bounded on the N. and W. by the Ohio River and intersected by the Great Kanawha River. The county has beds of coal and iron-ore and valuable salt-springs. Capital, Point Pleasant. Pop. in 1890, 22,863; in 1900, 24,142.

Mason, a post-town of Effingham co., Ill., on the Illinois Central R., 12 miles SSW. of Effingham. Pop. in 1900, 369.

Mason, a post-hamlet of Grant co., Ky., 40 miles S. of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Mason, a township (town) of Oxford co., Me. Pop. in 1900, 67.

Mason, a banking city, capital of Ingham co., Mich., on Sycamore Creek and on the Michigan Central R., 25 miles N. of Jackson. It has manufactures of wagons, brick and tile, etc. Pop. in 1900, 1828.

Mason, a post-village of Hillsboro co., N.H., in Mason township (town), on the Boston and Maine R., 18 miles W. of Nashua. Pop. of the town in 1900, 358.

Mason, a banking post-village of Warren co., Ohio, 22 miles NNE. of Cincinnati, on the Cincinnati, Lebanon and Northern R. Pop. in 1900, 629.

Mason, a banking post-town of Tipton co., Tenn., on the Louisville and Nashville R., 36 miles NE. of Memphis. Pop. in 1900, 448.

Mason, a banking post-village, capital of Mason co., Tex., about 110 miles WNW. of Austin. It has a cotton-gin. Pop. about 900.

Mason, a post-village of Mason co., W.Va., on the Ohio River, opposite Pomeroy, Ohio, its banking point. Coal is mined here. Pop. in 1900, 904.

Mason, a post-village of Bayfield co., Wis., on the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha R. The banking point is Ashland. It has lumbering interests. Pop. about 1200.

Mason and Dixon, a post-hamlet of Franklin co., Pa., on the Cumberland Valley R., 16 miles S. by W. of Chambersburg. Pop. 50.

Mason City, a banking city of Mason co., Ill, on the Chicago and Alton and the Illinois Central Rs., 30 miles N. of Springfield. It is a shipping point for grain and live-stock. Pop. in 1900, 1890.

Mason City, a banking city, capital of Cerro Gordo co., Iowa, on Lime Creek and on the Iowa Central and other railroads, 82 miles N. by W. of Marshalltown. Pop. in 1900, 6746. It has marble-quarries, foundry and machine-shops, and has various manufactures. It is the seat of the National Memorial University and of an Odd Fellows' Orphans' Home.

Mason City, a banking post-village of Custer co., Neb., in a farming and stock-raising district, 23 miles SE. of Broken Bow, on the Burlington Route. Pop. in 1900, 241.

Masonhall, a post-station of Obion co., Tenn.

Masontown, a banking post-borough of Fayette co., Pa., 1 mile from the Monongahela River and about 45 miles S. of Pittsburg. It has coal-, coke- and wine-industries. Pop. in 1900, 466.

Masontown, a post-village of Preston co., W.Va., 14 miles W. of Morgantown. Pop. 100.

Mason Valley, a post-station of Benton co., Ark.

Masonville, a banking post-village of Delaware co., Iowa, on the Illinois Central R., 54 miles W. of Dubuque. Pop. about 350.

Masonville, a post-village of Daviess co., Ky., 8 miles SSE. of Owensboro. Pop. 75.

Masonville, a post-village of Delta co., Mich., on the Little Bay de Noquet, 12 miles NNE. of Escanaba. Pop. 75.

Masonville, a post-village of Burlington co., N.J., on the Pennsylvania R., 14 miles E. of Camden. Pop. 200.

Masonville, a post-village in Masonville township (town), Delaware co., N.Y., on Bennett's Creek, about 30 miles ENE. of Binghamton. Pop. about 350; of the town in 1900, 1245.

Masovia, formerly a district in Poland, containing Warsaw. In the Middle Ages it had for a time its own dukes.

Maspeth, Queens co., N.Y., 6 miles E. of Brooklyn, on the Long Island R., is now a part of the city of New York, borough of Queens.

Massa, mås'så, a town of Italy, capital of the province of Massa e Carrara, 26 miles NW. of Pisa, near the Gulf of Genoa. Previous to 1829 it was the capital of the little duchy of Massa-Carrara. The ducal palace is now the prefecture. Near by are quarries of Carrara marble. The silk manufacture is actively carried on. Pop. of the commune in 1901, 26,413, of whom only about half lived within the town.

Massa and Carrara. See Massa e Carrara.

Mas'sabe'sic, a post-station of Hillsboro co., N.H.

Massac, a county in the S. part of Illinois, borders on Kentucky. Area, 238 sq. m. It is bounded on the SW. by the Ohio River. Capital, Metropolis City. Pop. in 1890, 11,313; in 1900, 13,110.

Massachusetts, one of the New England states and one of the original thirteen states of the American Union, is bounded on the N. by Vermont and New Hampshire, E. by the Atlantic Ocean, S. by the Atlantic Ocean and by Rhode Island and Connecticut, and W. by Rhode Island and New York. There are several islands within the state limits (Nantucket, Martha's Vineyard, Elizabeth Islands, etc.); and in the SE. the peninsula of Cape Cod extends into the sea, forming Cape Cod Bay, and, from its shape, is sometimes called the "right arm of the commonwealth." Area, 8315 sq. m., of which the land area is 8040 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—In the extreme W., between the sharp and somewhat precipitous elevation of the Taconic Mountains, stretching along the New York boundary-line, and the more eastward parallel range of the Hoosac Mountain and Green Mountains proper (highest elevation, Spruce Hill, 2588 feet), extends the beautiful Berkshire Valley (with the Berkshire Hills), containing the Housatonic and Hoosac rivers, which flow S. and N. respectively. (See Berkshire Hills and Green Mountains.) The Green Mountain region affords good pasturage and is well adapted to the dairy-business and to stock-raising. East of this belt lies the fertile and beautiful valley of the Connecticut River. The western slope of the broken and hilly country E. of the Connecticut Valley is a dissected plateau of 1000–1100 feet elevation, and affords excellent farming tracts. When the eastern slope of these hills is reached, we find a tract which, though not naturally fertile, has, under skilful culture, developed generous qualities as a farming region. The south-eastern part, the "Old Colony," as it is called, is very level, with a sandy and generally stony soil, covered naturally with pine forests. This part of the state abounds in shallow lakes, many of which, especially those upon Cape Cod, have no connection with the sea, but are filled with pure fresh water. This SE. section abounds in swamps, which produce much cedar timber; and here the cranberry is profitably grown upon a very large scale. The salt marshes, which extend along a part of the eastern coast of Massachusetts, afford much hay, of which the quality is often very good. The highest elevation in the state is Greylock (or Saddle) Mountain (3535 feet), in the NW. corner, in Berkshire co. In this section there are a number of peaks exceeding 2000 ft. in height, but no others reaching 3000 ft. E. of the Connecticut River the highest point is Mount Wachusett, a detached elevation in Worcester co., 2108 ft. high. Other noteworthy elevations are Mount Everett in the SW. (2624 ft.), and Mounts Tom (1214 ft.), Nonotuck, Holyoke (954 ft.), Sugar Loaf, and Metawampe and Pocumtuck, in the Connecticut Valley.

Coast-line, Harbors, Rivers, etc.—The Massachusetts coast-line, which extends from Salisbury Beach on the N. to near Narragansett Bay on the S., is indented by numerous large bays, of which the most important are Massachusetts Bay (terminating in Boston Harbor), Cape Cod Bay, and Buzzard's Bay. Less prominent inlets and harbors are those (beginning at the N.) of Newburyport, Ipswich, Annisquam (or Squam), Gloucester, Beverly, Salem, Marblehead, Nahant, Lynn, Plymouth, Sandwich, Barnstable, Wellfleet, Provincetown, Chatham, Cotuit, Hyannis, Woods Hole, New Bedford, and Westport. Mount Hope Bay, in the SW., an extension of Narragansett Bay, receives the navigable Taunton River. Plum Island is remarkable as being the northernmost of the sandspits that are so characteristic of the Atlantic coast. Cape Ann is a bold and rocky promontory, whose inhabitants are largely engaged in the fisheries and in granite-quarrying. The Connecticut River, which has been dammed at Turners Falls and Holyoke and furnishes immense water-power, traverses the state in an almost due N. and S. course. The Merrimac, Housatonic, Hoosac, Deerfield, Mill, Westfield, Miller's, Chicopee, Ware, Swift, Nashua, Blackstone, Concord, Charles, Assabet, Shawsheen, Spicket, Powow, Nemasket and Taunton rivers, and countless smaller streams, afford water-power, which is very extensively utilized. The Connecticut, Merrimac, and some of the smaller streams have, in their seasons, important fisheries of shad and alewives.

Geology and Minerals.—The surface of Massachusetts is largely overlaid with drift materials, and the underlying rocks show quite generally strong marks of glacial action. The peculiar lenticular hills associated with glacial action, and known as drumlins, kames, eskers, and "short hills," are largely distributed over the state. Most of the state's area is of Azoic or Archæan formation. The extreme W. is Silurian and Cambrian, and just W. of the Connecticut River another Silurian belt crosses the state from N. to S. The immediate valley of the Connecticut is mainly Triassic, abounding in ichnolites and other interesting fossils. Mounts Holyoke, Nonotuck, and Tom are parts of a remarkably precipitous barrier of trap rock, through which the Connecticut River has burst its way. To the N. and NE. of Worcester a Cambro-Silurian belt extends into New Hampshire, and in the vicinity of Boston and southwestward there is an irregular area of Cambrian and Cambro-Silurian age. The Carboniferous strata are a northeastward continuation of the Rhode Island coal-field. All the Massachusetts coals thus far found are of the anthracite class, exceeedingly hard, and igniting with great difficulty. In the W. part of Martha's Vineyard there is an interesting fossiliferous tract of Miocene age, and the Cape Cod region is Post-Tertiary. The principal rock-formations of Massachusetts are of gneissoid character, with occasional dikes of true granite. This is largely quarried, as at Rockport, Graniteville, Monson, Fall River, and Quincy, and is an important article of export. The marbles and limestones of Berkshire are extensively wrought for building-stone and for lime-burners' use. The Connecticut Valley affords a handsome brown sandstone. Soapstone (Andover), graphite (Sturbridge), ochre (Gay Head), corundum (Chester), feldspar, potter's clay, and mica are among the other mineral products of economic value. Iron-ore of the best quality is mined and smelted in Berkshire co. The lakes of Plymouth and Bristol cos. contain interesting deposits of limonite, formerly much utilized in the manufacture of iron. Quartz-sand for glass-makers' use is a product of Berkshire. Lead has been mined in Mount Tom (Easthampton). Small quantities of gold and copper have been found in the Green Mountain tract and argentiferous galena has been mined at Newburyport and elsewhere. The granite quarried in 1903 was valued at $2,720,066.

Climate.—The winters of Massachusetts are severe and at all times of the year the climatic changes are liable to be sudden and extreme. The prevalence of chilling E. winds along the coast is a marked feature. The average annual rainfall is about 40 inches and severe droughts are uncommon.

Forests.—All the original or primeval forest has now been removed from the state. The western counties furnish birch and maple timber for chair-stuff and beech for tool-making; in the central region chestnut timber is cut for fencing, railroad-ties, joinery, etc.; and the SE. affords hard and white pine and cedar, largely cut for the general lumber-trade, for box-making, etc. Much of the waste land of the state is covered with copse-wood, which is frequently cut over, with profit, for fuel, etc. The state has still remaining considerable areas covered with oak, ash, and hickory. The total area of forest-land is about 1,500,000 acres.

Agricultural Resources.—Although the soil of Massachusetts is accounted in general somewhat sterile, the cultivated lands rank high in productiveness. There is much absolutely waste land in the state, fit principally for copse-woods, or at best for pasturage; and the area of abandoned farm-lands is fast increasing, especially in the hill-country of the west. The beautiful and easily cultivated Connecticut Valley is hardly excelled in fertility by any region in the eastern United States, and even its outlying elevated sandy plains give remunerative crops. In Berkshire co. much of the soil is generous and well adapted to dairying and general agriculture. Western Franklin co. makes a specialty of live-stock and butter; the Connecticut Valley, of tobacco, broom-corn, and the cereals; Worcester co., of cheese and butter; Essex and Norfolk, of market-garden products; Middlesex, of garden products and milk. Hay and forage crops are everywhere important productions. The principal agricultural crops were, in 1900: corn, 1,545,346 bushels; oats, 550,786 bushels; barley, 42,854 bushels; rye, 133,747 bushels; buckwheat, 37,149 bushels; potatoes, 2,261,454 bushels; and hay, 550,067 tons. Near the coast the salt marshes, hitherto useful for their coarse hay only, have been diked in some instances and have given excellent farming-lands. Of the orchard fruits the apple is the most important. Cranberries are extensively grown in Barnstable and Plymouth cos. The value of the dairying products in 1900 was $12,885,774. The amount of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip of 1900 was 237,792 pounds.

Manufactures constitute by far the most important industrial interest of Massachusetts, and her large towns are all busy seats of productive enterprises of this kind. The state ranks first among the states of the Union in the manufacture of textiles, especially of cotton, the product of which is in value about one-third that of the entire United States. After cotton goods the largest industry of the state is the manufacture of worsteds and woollens. Massachusetts also holds first rank in the manufacture of boots and shoes and in that of paper and wood-pulp. Boston is the centre of the American boot and shoe-, leather- and wool-trades, and is the seat of a large array of miscellaneous manufactures. Boots and shoes are made extensively at Haverhill, Lynn, Brockton, and many other towns; leather at Peabody, etc.; cotton goods at Fall River, Lowell, Adams, Lawrence, Pittsfield, Chicopee, Holyoke, New Bedford, etc.; paper at Holyoke, Lee, Northampton, etc.; woollens at Lawrence, Lowell, Holyoke, and elsewhere; iron and other metallic goods and machinery at Worcester, Taunton, Fitchburg, and Springfield; fish-canning and preserving constitute the main industry of Gloucester; while New Bedford, Newburyport, Salem, Chelsea, Andover, Somerville, Amesbury, Woburn, Waltham, Everett, Wakefield, Middleboro, and Attleboro, and many other manufacturing towns employ numerous hands and much capital in a great variety of industrial pursuits. Prominent among these is the manufacture of nails, tacks, stoves, shoe-making machinery, carriages and wagons, sewing-machines, electrical appliances, rubber goods, clocks and watches, musical instruments, fire-arms, jewelry, hardware and cutlery, glassware, linseed and fish oil, fertilizers, hats, clothing, screws, wire goods, boxes, rattan-, willow- and basket-work, chairs and other furniture, shoe-thread, sewing-silk and cotton, bags and bagging, carpets, chemicals, medicines, soaps, rum, refined sugar, brick, small wares, straw goods, etc. The pork-packing business and its accessory pursuits are at present largely carried on in and near Boston. Ship-building is carried on mainly at Boston, Newburyport, and Salem. The value of the textile product in 1900 was $214,600,980; clothing, $15,032,604; leather boots and shoes, $135,354,165; foundry- and machine-shop products, $56,290,159; iron and steel, $13,491,159; paper and wood-pulp, $22,141,461; rubber (including elastic goods and rubber boots and shoes), $30,375,074. The tobacco and cigar manufactories, in 1899, numbered 693, yielding a product of 113,218,313 cigars and 5,550,540 cigarettes.

Commerce.—The principal seaports do a large coasting-business, both eastward and southward; and the construction of railroad lines and grain-elevators has given Boston a large export-trade to Europe, in addition to her former extensive business in that line. The exports are largely grain, cattle, flour, beef, pork, and other products of the West, with ice, granite, and the manufactured goods of the state. The ice-trade and the harvesting and storage of ice for commercial purposes are of great importance in the eastern part of Massachusetts.

Fisheries.—Gloucester, Yarmouth, and Provincetown are the principal fishing ports; but Newburyport, Marblehead, Salem, Beverly, Boston, Plymouth, and the minor ports do considerable deep-sea fishing, bringing in fares of cod, halibut, mackerel, herring, sea-trout, fish oil, etc., from the banks and coasts of Labrador and Newfoundland, the Nantucket Shoals, from the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and the Bays of Fundy and Chaleur. The coast-fisheries are extensive, taking mainly cod, haddock, hake, pollock, mackerel, blue-fish, bass, porgies, etc., besides menhaden and other fish for oil and fish guano. The shad-, alewife- and smelt-fisheries in the rivers are lucrative. Lobsters, oysters, clams, and other shell-fish are taken along the coast. New Bedford was at one time more extensively engaged in the whale-fishery than any other place in the world, furnishing upward of 400 vessels to the whaling fleet. Provincetown is likewise extensively engaged in the whale-fishery. Nantucket was also formerly very prominent in this field. This occupation, although still continued with vigor, has very materially declined. Great attention has been given to the stocking of the fresh waters of the state with trout, salmon, shad, alewives, black and striped bass, and other useful food-fishes, and to the erection of fish-ways surmounting obstructions in the streams. There are state or national hatcheries at Woods Hole, Wilkinsonville, and Winchester.

The Counties are 14 in number, viz.: Barnstable, Berkshire, Bristol, Dukes, Essex, Franklin, Hampden, Hampshire, Middlesex, Nantucket, Norfolk, Plymouth, Suffolk, and Worcester. The principal towns and cities are Boston, the capital (pop. in 1900, 560,892), Worcester (118,421), Fall River (104,863), Lowell (94,969), Cambridge (91,886), Lynn (68,513), Lawrence (62,559), New Bedford (62,442), Springfield, Somerville, Holyoke, Brockton, Salem, Chelsea, Haverhill, Malden, Newton, and Taunton.

Education.—The free public school system of Massachusetts is almost coeval with her history, and has long been recognized as one of the most efficient in this country. All the towns of any size have graded schools, including primary, intermediate, grammar, and high schools. There are state normal schools at Salem, Westfield, Worcester, Bridgewater, Fitchburg, Hyannis, Lowell, North Adams, and Framingham, and a normal art school at Boston. There are many excellent private, denominational, and parochial schools and academies. The chief seat of learning is Harvard University, at Cambridge, with professional schools of science, law, divinity, medicine, dentistry, mining, and agriculture, the last (the Bussey Institution) being to some extent a state institution. There is a state agricultural college at Amherst, which town is also the seat of Amherst College (Congregational). At Williamstown is Williams College (Congregational). Worcester is the seat of Clark University. Tufts College, at Medford, is under Universalist auspices. The Boston University is a Methodist institution offering a wide range of special and professional instruction. Wellesley College, at Wellesley, Smith College, at Northampton, Mount Holyoke College, at South Hadley, and Radcliffe College, at Cambridge (the last-named in affiliation with Harvard University), are for women. Theological training is given at Andover Theological Seminary (Congregational), Newton Theological Institute (Baptist), Boston University, Tufts College, and at Cambridge. The Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the Worcester Polytechnic Institute hold high rank. Important schools of music are the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston and the Boston University College of Music. The Boston Museum furnishes an advanced school in art. Among the leading charitable and benevolent institutions are the Clark institution for deaf-mutes at Northampton; the Perkins Institute for the Blind and the Massachusetts General Hospital at Boston; the Horace Mann School for Deaf-Mutes at Boston; the Massachusetts School for Feeble-Minded at Waltham; the state primary school for pauper children at Monson, and various state reform schools.

Railroads.—The first railroad in the United States (used for hauling granite for the Bunker Hill Monument) was constructed in Massachusetts. The state was one of the first to enter largely upon railroad construction. In 1835 it had over 100 miles of railroad; in 1846, 626 miles; in 1850, 1035 miles; in 1865, 1297 miles; in 1870, 1480 miles; in 1880, 1915 miles; in 1890, 2097 miles; and in 1900, 2111 miles.

Government.—The governor and the general state officers are chosen annually. The governor is assisted by an executive council of 8 members. The legislature, styled the General Court, is composed of a Senate and a House of Representatives, elected annually. The state sends 14 members to the lower house of the federal Congress.

Population.—The original white population of Massachusetts was almost entirely of English descent, but since 1840 there has been a large immigration mainly of Irish and French Canadians. About 1775 the population was estimated at 250,000; in 1790, it was 378,787; in 1800, 422,845; in 1810, 472,040; in 1820, 523,287; in 1830, 610, 408; in 1840, 737,699; in 1850, 994,514; in 1860, 1,231,066; in 1870, 1,457,351; in 1880, 1,783,085; in 1890, 2,238,943; and in 1900, 2,805,346. The foreign-born population in 1900 was 846,324.

History.—The first permanent settlement within the present state of Massachusetts was made in 1620, when the colony of Plymouth was founded by the Pilgrim fathers, Puritan separatists from the Church of England. The colony of Massachusetts Bay was established in 1628–30, its original leaders being members of the Puritanical party of the Church of England, which they sought to reorganize without prelacy, but which they did not wish to abandon. Boston, founded in 1630, was the capital of the colony. Harvard College was founded within a few years after the coming of the first settlers. The Massachusetts Bay Colony absorbed the Plymouth Colony in 1692. The Plymouth and Massachusetts Bay colonies developed the system of democratic local self-government in which the town, originally based upon the congregation, was an autonomous unit. The colonies of Rhode Island and Connecticut were offshoots of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, the harsh yoke of whose theocracy early led to emigration. The island counties were from 1641 to 1695 under the separate governorship of the Mayhew family, who held from the Earl of Stirling and later from the Duke of York. In the middle of the seventeenth century Massachusetts extended her authority over the English settlements in Maine, which region remained subject to her until 1820.

In 1684 the charter of the Massachusetts Bay colony was declared forfeited by Charles II., and in 1686 the province was placed under the government of Sir Edmund Andros. In 1689, on the news of the revolution in England, the people rose and drove out Andros. A new charter was issued by William and Mary in 1692 by which the governor was appointed by the crown, but under which Massachusetts managed as formerly her own affairs. Massachusetts took a leading part in the events preceding the war of independence, the first contests of that struggle taking place upon her soil. A state constitution was adopted in 1780. For many years Massachusetts was a stronghold of the Federalist party. In the Civil War, under Governor John A. Andrew, Massachusetts distinguished herself by her efforts in behalf of the preservation of the union. The state has always occupied a prominent position in respect to benevolent, educational, and humanitarian efforts and reforms.

Massaciuccoli, mås-så-chook'ko-le, a small lake of Italy, 8 miles W. of Lucca. It is 2½ miles in length and discharges its waters into the Montero.

Mauritius, maw-rish'e-ŭs, formerly Île de France, an island of the Indian Ocean, forming with its dependencies a crown colony of Great Britain, about 530 miles E. of Madagascar and 65 miles NE. of Réunion. Lat. of Port Louis, the capital, 20° 10′ S. Area, 705 sq. m. It is surrounded by coral reefs and in the interior is composed chiefly of rugged and irregular mountains, rising generally into points or pinnacles of considerable height, the highest, the Black River Peak (or Piton de la Rivière Noire), having an elevation of 2710 feet, and the singular insulated rock Pieter Both 2600 feet. Between the mountains and along the coast there are several large, well-watered and exceedingly fertile plains and valleys. The climate is unhealthy and the island is subject to frequent hurricanes. The annual rainfall is frequently 150–160 inches. Shady groves of mango, dense masses of mimosa, and many other beautiful trees of the tropics are to be met with in Mauritius. Plants from Europe, Africa, Madagascar, and India are acclimated and thrive well. The principal objects of cultivation are sugar, rice, maize, mandioc, and vegetables; coffee, pepper, and the mulberry for the production of silk are grown to a limited extent. The native fauna of the island is an impoverished one, and nearly all of the domestic animals have been introduced. The extinct dodo is the most interesting type of the island's past avi-fauna. Sugar, rum, drugs, and fibres are the staple exports. Mauritius is traversed by lines of railway having a length (1902) of 105 miles. The government of the island, with its dependencies Rodriguez, Diego Garcia, etc., is vested in a governor and an executive council, assisted by a council of government composed of 28 members. The largest town is Port Louis, the capital. Mauritius was discovered in 1505 by the Portuguese. The Dutch obtained possession of it in 1598 and named it Mauritius in honor of Maurice of Nassau. Having been abandoned by the Dutch, the island was appropriated early in the eighteenth century by the French, who retained it till 1810, when it was captured by the British. It is well known as the scene of Saint-Pierre's tale of "Paul and Virginia." French is the language chiefly spoken. Many of the people are of African, Hindu, Chinese, and Malagasy race. Pop. in 1901, 378,195, of whom the whites numbered about 3000.

Mecca, or Mekka, měk'ką (anc. Macora'ba; Arab. Makka), a city of Arabia, the most holy place of the Mohammedan world, capital of the Turkish province of Hejaz, 65 miles E. of Jiddah. Lat. 21° 28′ N.; lon. 40° 8′ E. It stands in a narrow, sandy valley, enclosed by barren hills from 200 to 500 feet or more high, and is ill supplied with water. In its centre are the sacred precincts, or mosque (El-Haram), embracing a large area, encircled by colonnades, and enclosing the Kaaba, or sacred house, a small cubical structure, erected on foundations that are attributed to Abraham. The streets of the city are wider than is usual in Eastern towns, and the houses are of stone, often three or more stories high, and well lighted. A newer city, built to the SE. of the sacred quarters, has a somewhat European aspect. The castle, near the Sherif's house, is thought by the Arabs to be impregnable. Mecca, which is the birthplace of Mohammed, is annually filled at the time of the Haj (or pilgrimage), when apartments in almost every house are hired to strangers, and thousands besides encamp outside the town. This pilgrimage, customary among the Arabs in early and idolatrous ages and subsequently enjoined by Mohammed on all his followers, is the foundation of Mecca's fame and the only source of her wealth. The number of pilgrims in a year is estimated at about 100,000 and by some much higher. It has materially lessened of late years. The kissing of the black stone of the Kaaba is the great object of the pilgrimage. Near the Kaaba are the pulpit of the Imam and the famous well of Zemzem, alleged to be the one whence Hagar obtained water for Ishmael.

The colleges of Mecca have fallen to decay, and the libraries, once rich, have totally disappeared. During the period of the pilgrimage the city is for three or four months one of the greatest marts in the East; its merchants occasionally accumulate large fortunes. The Sherifs, or direct descendants of Mohammed, are now a numerous and widely spread body. The Grand Sherif nominally exercises authority in the name of the sultan, but there is now a wali (or governor) by his side. The stationary population of Mecca is estimated at between 40,000 and 60,000. Only Mussulmans are permitted to enter the city, which, however, has been visited by a few Europeans. A railroad is in course of construction between Mecca and Damascus.

Mediterranean Sea (L. Mare Internum or Mediterra'neum; Fr. Mer Méditerranée, maiR mȧ'dee'tĕR'rȧ'nȧ'; Sp. Mar Mediterráneo, maR mȧ-de-tĕR-rȧ'nȧ-o; It. Mare Mediterraneo, mȧ'rȧ mȧ-de-tĕR-rȧ'nȧ-o; Ger. Mittelmeer, mit'tęl-maiR', or Mittelländisches Meer, mit'tęl-lĕn'dish-ęs maiR), a great inland sea, between lat. 30° 20′ and 45° 50′ N. and lon. 5° 30′ W. and 36° E., about 2200 miles long; breadth, from Venice to the shores of the Gulf of Sidra, 1050 miles. On the N. and NW. it washes the shores of Europe, on the S. those of Africa, and on the E. those of Asia. It communicates on the W. with the Atlantic Ocean by the Strait of Gibraltar, and on the NE. with the Black Sea through the Sea of Marmora and the straits of Dardanelles and Bosporus. The Suez Canal affords communication between it and the Red Sea. It is very irregular in shape. By the projection of the S. part of Italy, and of Cape Bon in Africa, and the interposition of the island of Sicily, it is divided near its centre into two distinct and not very unequal E. and W. portions. In addition to these, the other important subdivisions are the Tyrrhenian (or Tuscan) Sea, the Adriatic Sea, the Ionian Sea, and the Ægean Sea (or Grecian Archipelago). The largest gulfs are, on the shores of Europe, those of Lyons, Genoa, Taranto, Lepanto, Koron, Messenia, Kolokythia, Ægina, and Saloniki; on the shores of Asia, Adramyti, Smyrna, Adalia, and Iskanderun; on the shores of Africa, Sidra and Gabes. The largest and most important islands are Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica, and the Balearic Isles in the W. division, and Cyprus, Crete, Rhodes, the Ionian and Ægean islands, and Malta in the E. division. The principal rivers which discharge into the Mediterranean are the Ebro, Rhone, Po, and Nile; and through the Dardanelles it receives the waters of the Black Sea. The area of the basin is estimated to be about 1,100,000 sq. m. Between Cape Bon and the Sicilian coast, where the water is shallowest, the depth in places barely exceeds 30 fathoms, but in almost all other parts considerable, and even very great, depths are found, the average depth being assumed to be about 4500 feet. The greatest sounding thus far made in the western basin is 12,230 feet; in the eastern, S. of the western extremity of the Morea, 14,695 feet. Owing to the very narrow channel which connects the Mediterranean with the main ocean, there is very little tide, though in some places, as in the Ionian Sea, the Adriatic, on parts of the African coast, etc., a rise of nearly (or more than) 6 feet sometimes occurs. Owing to loss of water through excessive evaporation and the fact that this deficiency is not made good by the discharge of fresh waters into the basin, the salinity of the Mediterranean is greater than that of the Atlantic Ocean, and this disparity is progressively increasing, to which is added a lowering of the surface-level. Hence, there is a steady inflow of the lighter waters of the ocean through the Strait of Gibraltar. The surface waters of the Mediterranean, which are famed for their blue color and transparency, have at times a markedly high temperature, but below 190 fathoms, or somewhat lower than the mean depth of the Gibraltar passage, to the greatest depth, the temperature remains uniformly at 55°. The prevailing winds are from the SE. and SW. in spring and from the NE. and NW. during the rest of the year. They often blow suddenly and with great violence. The most remarkable are the Bora, in the Adriatic, and the burning Sirocco, from the African Desert. Waterspouts are common on the coast of Asia Minor. Active volcanoes exist on the coast of Italy (Vesuvius), in the Lipari Islands (Stromboli), in Sicily (Etna), and the Cyclades (island of Santorin). The Mediterranean abounds in fish and also furnishes fine coral and sponges.

The Mediterranean was called by the Hebrews "the Great Sea." The Phœnicians are the first people known to have extended their commerce along its coasts; the Greeks afterwards disputed it with them and with the Carthaginians. After the destruction of Carthage the Romans were sole masters of its shores. In the latter part of the Middle Ages Pisa, Genoa, and Venice were great maritime powers in the Mediterranean. At their close the Venetians almost monopolized its commerce.

Mesopotamia, mĕs'o-po-tā'me-a (Arab. Al-Jezira or Al Jezireh, âl jĕz-ee'rẹh, "the island"), the name given by the ancient Greeks and Romans to the greater part (the northern portion) of the country between the rivers Euphrates and Tigris, now comprised in the vilayets of Bagdad, Mosul, Aleppo, and Diarbekr. The region is mostly a great plain. In ancient times a large portion of it was brought under a high state of cultivation by means of irrigation canals. Now it is mostly a barren expanse except along the rivers. Mesopotamia was successively under the sway of the Assyrians, Babylonians, Persians, Greeks, Parthians, and Romans. The name Mesopotamia (from the Gr. μέσος, mesos, and ποταμός, potamos) signifies literally "between the rivers." In the Old Testament the region figures as Aram of the Two Rivers (Aram Naharaim) and the Plain of the Two Rivers.

It is situated on a splendid harbor formed by a peninsula in the shape of a sickle (whence the original Greek name of Zancle), with mountains towering in the immediate background, and its streets command superb views of the Calabrian main-land. There is little in the appearance of Messina to reflect the great antiquity of the town, which has been a sufferer by earthquake and other calamitous visitations. It is well laid out with broad thoroughfares paved with blocks of lava. A fine esplanade, or Marina (Corso Vittorio Emanuele), skirts the sea. The principal open places are the Piazza del Duomo (Cathedral Square), with a handsome fountain, and the Piazza dell' Annunziata, with a statue of Don John of Austria. Among the interesting edifices are the cruciform Norman cathedral, of whose original structure little now remains; the church of Santa Annunziata dei Catalani, the oldest Norman church of the city; the church of Santa Maddalena, the fine Palazzo Municipale, the villa Rocca Guelfonia, and the municipal hospital, a vast and venerable pile. The old citadel which defended the harbor has just been demolished. The university, dating from the sixteenth century, has about 650 pupils. Messina is, next to Palermo, the most important commercial city of Sicily, and its harbor presents a scene of extraordinary animation. Messina has enjoyed a reputation for its silk fabrics. The fisheries are important.

About the beginning of the fifth century B.C. a colony of Messenians was introduced into Zancle and the name of the town was changed to Messene (L. Messana). Owing to the advantages of its site the place has been commercially important since early times. The town is the seat of an archbishop. Pop. of the city proper in 1901, 93,672; of the commune, 149,778.

Messina, Strait of (It. Faro di Messina, fâ'ro dee mĕs-see'nâ; anc. Fre'tum Sic'ulum), a strait which separates Sicily from Italy and connects the Tyrrhenian with the Ionian Sea. Length, about 20 miles. The width where it is narrowest does not exceed 2 miles, the broadest part being about 12 miles. The depth is very great and a strong tidal current makes the navigation somewhat difficult. In ancient mythology two female sea-monsters kept guard over the passage. On the Italian side was the one called Scylla, stationed where the rock Scylla stood forth from the waters. On the Sicilian side Charybdis engulfed the ships by sucking them down within the depths.

Metija, or El Metijah, mä'tee'jä, a plain of Algeria, between the mountains and the sea, about 85 miles long by 18 miles in mean breadth. On it stands the city of Algiers. It is noted for its fertility, although formerly very unhealthy, and is extensively colonized by Europeans.

Metis, two rivers of Quebec, entering the S. shore of the St. Lawrence. One, called Grand Metis, takes its rise in the NW. angle of the co. of Bonaventure, and, running N., discharges itself into an expansive estuary called Anse aux Snelles. The other, Little Metis, rises in the rear of the seigniory of Metis and falls into Little Metis Harbor.

Metis, a post-village of Rimouski co., Quebec. See Grand Metis.

Metkovic, or Met'kovitch, a town of Herzegovina, at the head of navigation on the Narenta, 24 miles SSW. of Mostar. It is the seat of a large trade. Pop. in 1900, 4878.

Metlakaht'la, or New Metlakahtla, a post-station and Indian reservation on Annette Island, Alexander Archipelago, Alaska, with about 850 Christianized Indians. See Metlakahtla, British Columbia.

Metlakahtla, a decayed village on the W. coast (54° 20′ N.) of British Columbia. It was formerly inhabited by Christianized Chimsyan natives, since removed to Annette Island, Alaska.

Metlaltoyuca, a village of Mexico, in the state of Puebla, 90 miles NW. of Jalapa. The district is noted for its coffee.

Metlili, mĕt-lee'lee, a walled town of the Algerian Sahara, in Mzab, 30 miles SW. of Gardaia. Pop. 2000.

Metoe Bayou, Ark., drains parts of Lonoke and Prairie cos., runs in a SSE. direction, and enters the Arkansas River in the S. part of Arkansas co. It is about 100 miles long.

Meto'men, a post-hamlet of Fond du Lac co., Wis., in Metomen township (town), about 20 miles W. by S. of Fond du Lac. Pop. of the town in 1900, 1194.

Metompkin, me-tom'kin, a post-hamlet of Accomac co., Va., is near the Atlantic Ocean (with which it communicates by a navigable inlet), 23 miles S. of Pocomoke City, Md.

Metropolis City, a banking city, capital of Massac co., Ill., on the Ohio River, 38 miles above Cairo, on the Illinois Central R. It has various industries, including flouring- and saw-mills, plough-works, potteries, manufactories of fruit-boxes and baskets, etc. Pop. in 1900, 4069.

Metropolitan, a post-village of Dickinson co., Mich., on the Chicago and Northwestern R. The banking point is Escanaba or Iron Mountain. Pop. about 400.

Metropolitan, a post-station of Queens co., N.Y.

Metsovo, or Mezovo, a town of European Turkey, in Epirus (vilayet of Janina), in the region of the Pindus mountains. Pop. about 6000. It is the principal town of the Tsintsars (Wallachs or Rumans). Its position is strategically important.

Mettacahonts, a post-village of Ulster co., N.Y. The banking point is Ellenville or Kingston. Pop. about 250.

Mettau, a river of Bohemia, tributary to the Elbe.

Mettelhorn, a summit of the Swiss Alps, in the Zermatt region. It commands a magnificent view. Height, 11,188 feet.

Metten, a village of Bavaria, near the Danube and on the southern border of the Bavarian Forest, 2½ miles from Deggendorf. It has a Benedictine abbey founded by Charlemagne.

Mettenberg, a mountain of the Bernese Alps, in the Grindelwald region. Height, 10,193 feet.

Metter, a banking post-village of Bulloch co., Ga., on the Central of Georgia R. Pop. about 400.

Mettet, mĕt'tā', a commune of Belgium, province and 12 miles SSW. of Namur. Pop. about 4000.

Mettlach, mĕt'lăĸ, a town of Rhenish Prussia, in the district of Treves, 29 miles by rail from Saarbrücken. It has extensive potteries. Pop. in 1900, 1959.

Mettmann, mĕtt'mănn, a town of Rhenish Prussia, 9½ miles NE. of Düsseldorf, on the Düssel. It has manufactures of cotton and silk goods, buttons, britannia-ware, etc. Pop. in 1900, 8615.

Mettray, mĕt'trā', a village of France, in Indre-et-Loire, 5 miles N. of Tours, with a celebrated reformatory (agricultural colony) for boys.

Metuchen, me-tŭtch'ĕn, a post-borough of Middlesex co., N.J., on the Pennsylvania and the Lehigh Valley Rs., 5 miles NE. of New Brunswick. It has rubber-works. Pop. in 1900, 1786.

Metz, mĕts (Fr. pron. mĕss; anc. Divodu'rum, afterwards Mediomat'ricum and Met'tis or Me'tis), a city of Germany, capital of the district of Lorraine, previous to 1870 the capital of the French department of Moselle, at the confluence of the Moselle and Seille, 80 miles NW. of Strassburg and 170 miles E. of Paris. The old part, which has narrow streets and quaint houses, lies on sloping ground between the Seille and the Moselle, while the newer portion is built on islands formed by the arms of the Moselle. There are several fine open places and a handsome esplanade adorned with statues of Marshal Ney and Emperor William I. and with a beautiful fountain. The cathedral of St. Stephen, a magnificent cruciform pile, built on the highest ground of the city and containing fine paintings, was begun in the thirteenth century and finished in the sixteenth century, and is now undergoing complete restoration. Among the other edifices of interest are the garrison church, the church of St. Vincent, the church of St. Constance, the court-house, the town-hall, the municipal museum, and the railway station. The educational institutions of Metz include schools of music and art and an artillery school. The municipal library contains over 80,000 volumes and some manuscripts dating from the early part of the Middle Ages. The industries comprise the manufacture of leather, shoes, hats, arms, cloth, artificial flowers, etc. Metz is one of the strongest fortresses in the world, its defenses having been originally constructed by the French and enlarged by the Germans. A dozen forts encircle the city. Pop. in 1900, 58,424. Metz was an important military station of the Romans. Under the Franks it was the capital of Austrasia. After the disruption of the great Frankish realm it was included in the kingdom of Germany, and from the beginning of the thirteenth century was a free imperial city. It was at Metz that the Emperor Charles IV. issued the famous Golden Bull in 1356. In 1552 the town was occupied by Henry II. of France, whose general, Francis of Guise, immediately after successfully withstood a siege by the Emperor Charles V. From that time to 1870 Metz belonged to France. On Oct. 27, 1870, after a siege of two months, the French general, Bazaine, surrendered here with a vast army to the Germans. Already in Roman times Metz was the seat of a bishop. The bishops belonged to the ecclesiastical princes of the Holy Roman (German) Empire, ruling over a considerable district. In 1552 their see was seized by Henry II. of France.

Metz, a post-village of Steuben co., Ind., 44 miles NNE. of Fort Wayne. Pop. about 300.

Metz, a village of Presque Isle co., Mich. The banking point is Rogers.

Metz, a post-village of Vernon co., Mo., 14 miles NNW. of Nevada. Pop. in 1900, 159.

Metz, a post-village of Marion co., W.Va., on the Baltimore and Ohio R. The banking point is Mannington. Pop. 100.

Metzenseifen, mĕt'sẹn-zī'fẹn, a town of northern Hungary, 18 miles W. of Kaschau. Pop. about 5000.

Metzingen, mĕt'sing-ẹn, a town of Württemberg, on the Neckar, 18 miles SE. of Stuttgart. It has a number of establishments connected with the textile industry. Pop. in 1900, 5460.

Metzler, a post-village of Somerset co., Pa. Pop. 65.

Metztitlán, a town of Mexico, in the state of Hidalgo, 37 miles N. by W. of Pachuca.

Meu, mŭh, a river of France, joins the Vilaine about 3 miles above Pontreau. Length, about 50 miles.

Meudon, mŭh'dôNᵍ' (L. Meudo), a town of France, in Seine-et-Oise, 2 miles SW. of Paris. Lat. of observatory, 48° 48′ 18″ N.; lon. 2° 13′ 54″ E. The palace in which Maria Louisa resided was in great part destroyed during the siege of Paris in 1870–71, but has been partially restored. Near the town is the extensive Forest of Meudon, a favorite resort of the Parisians. The town has a variety of industries, including the manufacture of glass. There is a monument to Rabelais, who was a curate of the place. Pop. (commune) in 1901, 9702.

Meulan, mŭh'lôNᵍ', a town of France, in Seine-et-Oise, on the Seine, 8 miles WNW. of Poissy. Pop. about 2000.

Meulebeeck, mö'lẹh-bāk', a village of Belgium, in Brabant, 1 mile NW. of Brussels.

Meulebeke, mö'lẹh-bā'kẹh, a town of Belgium, in West Flanders, 10 miles N. of Courtrai. Pop. in 1900, 9185. It has manufactures of lace and cotton goods.

Meung-sur-Loire, mā'ŭNᵍ' sür lwär (L. Magdunum), a town of France, in Loiret, on the right bank of the Loire, 11 miles WSW. of Orleans. It is an ancient town. A fine twelfth-century church and an old gateway are interesting relics of its past. Pop. about 3000.

Meurs, the French name of Mörs.

Meursault, mur'sō', a small town of France, in Côte-d'Or, 27 miles SSW. of Dijon. It is noted for its wines.

Meurthe, murt (L. Murta), a river of France, rises in the Vosges, SE. of Saint-Dié, and joins the Moselle on the right at Frouard, 5 miles N. of Nancy. Length, about 100 miles.

Meurthe-et-Moselle, murt ā mō'zĕl', a department of France, bordering on Germany, comprising part of old Lorraine, formed in 1871 of portions of the departments of Meurthe and Moselle remaining to France after the cession of Alsace-Lorraine to Germany. Area, 2025 sq. m. It is traversed by the Moselle, which receives the Meurthe. It has fine scenery, much fertile soil, extensive vineyards, great mineral wealth (among the richest iron-deposits of the republic), and varied and extensive manufactures. Capital, Nancy. Other towns are Lunéville and Toul. Pop. in 1891, 444,150; in 1901, 484,722.

Meuse, mŭz (Fr. pron. muz; Dutch, Maas, mȧs; anc. Mosa), a river of Europe, rises in France, department of Haute-Marne, NE. of Langres; traverses the department of Vosges, where it disappears underground near Bazoilles, reappearing, at the end of 4 miles, near Neufchâteau; it then flows through the departments of Meuse and Ardennes, passing Verdun (near which place it becomes navigable), Sedan, Mézières, and Givet; it then traverses Belgium in a NE. direction, passing Dinant, Namur, Huy, and Liège; it then flows N. and W. through the Netherlands, passing Maestricht, Roermond, and Venlo, and near Gorkum joins the Waal (the left branch of the Rhine). The united stream, bearing the name of Merwede, after traversing the marshy expanse of the Biesbosch again separates into several branches (the southern arm for some distance bearing the name of Hollandsch Diep), forming a number of islands, and entering the North Sea by several mouths, the principal of which are the Meuse (Oude Maas, together with the more northerly Nieuwe Maas, or lower Lek) on the N., the Flakkee (or Haringvliet) in the middle, and the Grevelingen (Krammer) on the S. These estuarine water-courses represent in reality in great part the outflow of the Rhine through the Waal and Lek branches, the Rhine and Meuse having a combined delta. Chief affluents on the left are the Bar, Sambre, and Dommel; on the right, the Semoy, Lesse, Ourthe, Roer, and Niers. Length of the Meuse, 575 miles; navigable for about 400 miles. Various canals unite it with the Moselle, Oise, and other streams.

Meuse, a department of France, in the NE., formed of part of the old province of Lorraine, and bounded N. by Belgium. Area, 2045 sq. m. Pop. in 1901, 283,480. It is traversed from S. to N. by the Meuse, parallel with which extends a range of low hills called the Mountains of Argonne, which separate the basins of the Meuse and Marne. The region is a productive one, yielding grain, beets (for sugar), wine, etc. The forests are extensive. Capital, Bar-le-Duc.

Meuselbach, moi'zẹl-bāk', a village of Germany, in Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt, 6 miles S. of Königsee.

Meuselwitz, moi'zęl-ŵits\, a town of Germany, duchy of Saxe-Altenburg, 15 miles NE. of Gera. It has establishments connected with the textile industry, foundries, machine-shops, and coal-mines. Pop. in 1900, 6754.

Mevagissey, a small fishing town of England, in Cornwall, on the coast, 6 miles S. of St. Austell.

Mewar, a Rajput state. See UDAIPUR.

Mewe, mȧ'ŵęh, a town of East Prussia, 8 miles NW. of Marienwerder, on the Vistula. Pop. in 1900, 4105.

Mexborough, a town of England, in Yorkshire, 5 miles NE. of Rotherham. It has iron-works and potteries. Pop. in 1901, 10,417.

Mexcoac, mĕx-ko-ȧk', a village of Mexico, 8 miles S. of the city of Mexico.

Mexia, a post-village of Monroe co., Ala. Pop. 50.

Mexia, mā-he'ą, a banking post-town of Limestone co., Tex., on the Houston and Texas Central and the Trinity and Brazos Valley Rs., 84 miles S. of Dallas. It has cotton-mills and -gins, etc. Pop. in 1900, 2393.

Mexico (Sp. Méjico, mĕh'ne-ko), a republic in the southern part of North America, lying between lat. 14° 30′ and 32° 40′ N., and between the meridians of longitude of 86° 45′ (northeastern Yucatan) and 117° 5′ W. Area (inclusive of the small outlying islands), 767,050 sq. m. Where not confined by the sea, it is bounded on the SE. by Guatemala (from which it is partly separated by the Suchiate and Usumacinta rivers) and British Honduras, and on the N. by the United States. The Rio Grande forms the boundary with Texas. The boundary with the United States has a length of 1833 miles, of which 1136 are constituted by the Rio Grande. The general contour of the country is very irregular, the land extending southward between the Gulf of Mexico and the Pacific Ocean as a peninsular extension of the United States, and rapidly narrowing in that direction. In the extreme SE. the peninsula of Yucatan projects northward between the Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Mexico. On the isthmus of Tehuantepec the distance separating the Gulf of Mexico from the Pacific Ocean is hardly 130 miles. The greatest breadth is between the most eastern and western parts on the United States boundary, where the distance from the Gulf shore to the Pacific is not far from 1500 miles. The peninsula of Lower (Baja) California extends into the Pacific about 700 miles, and is separated from the main-land by the Gulf of California.

Relief of the Land.—Mexico is pre-eminently a region of mountain elevations, consisting in the main of a vast central plateau or table-land, of bounding or flanking ridges to this plateau (Sierra Madre Oriental and Sierra Madre Occidental, with the Sierra Pacífico, as they and their ramifications are vaguely designated), of mountains of inferior height rising above the plateau, and of the low-lands (tierras calientes,—i.e., "hot lands") which lie at the foot of the plateau-borders and make up the rich coastal strips on both the Atlantic and Pacific sides. The plateau, which is a southward continuation of the elevated regions of the southwestern United States, attains its greatest altitude (8000–8600 feet) S. and SW. of the city of Mexico (7400 ft.). It is constructed largely of volcanic and sedimental sands and ashes, which have filled up ancient mountain valleys to the brim, and thereby masked the nuclear orographic relief,—the internal mountain-ridges, many of which rise in crests, knots, and "islands" far above the true plateau-surface. Just what relation the Mexican Cordilleras bear to the main mountain systems of the western United States has not been absolutely determined; but it seems probable that the Rocky Mountains proper have no direct continuation in Mexico. The Sierra Nevada, on the other hand, can almost positively be assumed to be continued in the axial chain of Lower California, whose elevations in the south reach 8000–10,000 ft. The highest summit of Mexico not of a volcanic character appears to be Zempoaltepec, in the state of Oaxaca, about 10,000 ft., which marks the divergence of the mountain systems whose determining lines were formed in Central America.

Volcanoes.—The more distinctive mountain forms of Mexico are the volcanoes, of which there are hundreds scattered over the plateau and at various points of the southern lowlands. Many of these have only recently become extinct, others are semi-active or dormant. The more prominent ones are the Peak of Orizaba, or the Citlaltepetl ("Star Mountain"), the culminating point of the republic, about 18,250 feet in elevation; Popocatepetl ("Smoky Mountain"), 17,500 ft.; Ixtaccihuatl ("White Woman"), 16,960 (17,200?) ft.; Nevado de Toluca, about 14,950 ft.; Malinche, 13,460 ft.; Cofre de Perote, or Nauhcampatepetl, 13,400 ft.; Nevado de Colima, 14,100 ft.; Volcán de Colima, 12,750 ft., now active for a period of about 10 years; Tancítaro, 12,650 ft.; Tuxtla; Jorullo (famed for its great eruption in 1759), 4300 ft.; and Ceboruco, also active. Most of these are situated near the southern border of the plateau or on the low-land immediately S. of it. The three summits first named are covered with perpetual snow; Ixtaccihuatl alone has glaciers of any extent (Porfirio Diaz Glacier). The snow-line is found at about 14,500–15,000 ft., 1000–1500 ft. above the timber-line.

Coast-Line, Rivers, etc.—The opposite shores of Mexico differ widely in physical conformation. The great current of the Atlantic Ocean sweeps around the peninsula of Yucatan and through the Gulf of Mexico, causing sand-banks and barring of the river-mouths. On the whole coast of the Gulf of Mexico there is no bay of any importance, no good natural harbor easy of access, and but little well-sheltered anchorage. Between Yucatan and Tabasco lies the Laguna de Términos, 45 miles long and 30 miles wide, connected with the sea by two channels, the deepest having but two fathoms. Farther W., on the coast of Tabasco, the Laguna de Santa Ana, though deep within, is quite inaccessible to shipping. Similar remarks apply to the lagoons of Madero (or Alvarado), Tamiahua, and Tampico. Beyond the last-named place N. extends a long succession of sand-banks, fronting the shore, and exhibiting, in its earlier stages, the process of forming lagoons. Here, on the coast of Tamaulipas, we find the lagoons Morales, Madre, Santander, and a few others, all difficult of approach and rapidly filling up with sand. On the W. coast of Mexico, from Acapulco, in lat. 16° 50′ N., the harbor of which is landlocked, deep, and capacious, to Guaymas, far up the Gulf of California, extends a series of fine harbors, capable of sheltering the largest vessels. In lat. 21° 32′ N., at the mouth of the Rio Grande de Santiago, is the noble harbor of San Blas; and in lat. 23° 15′ N. is the harbor of Mazatlán. This is difficult of access and inferior in most respects to the harbor of Guaymas, in lat. 27° 50′ N. The E. shore of the California peninsula offers many bays and small havens. Its W. side, towards the ocean, is less indented.

Mexico is in general sparingly watered and labors under the almost total want of navigable rivers reaching the interior. The streams, descending from the elevated interior to the seas, assume the character of rapid torrents, dry at one season and overflowing at another. The longest and greatest of the Mexican rivers is the Rio Grande del Norte, called also Rio Bravo del Norte, which, as has already been seen, forms the greater part of the boundary between Mexico and the United States, and the waters of which belong to both countries. The Rio de Tampico, formed by the junction of the Pánuco with the Tula or Montezuma, flows NE. to the Gulf of Mexico, and at its mouth is the port of Tampico; total course, about 200 miles. The San Juan rises in the metalliferous mountains of Oaxaca, forms the great lagoons of Tequiapa and Embarcadero, and reaches the sea through the Laguna del Madero. The Coatzacoalcos issues from the mountains of Tarifa, lat. 17° N., forms part of the boundary between the states of Oaxaca and Vera Cruz, and, winding round to the N. and E., falls into the Gulf of Mexico, in lat. 18° 8′ N. This river has attracted much attention, because it has been supposed that the communication between the Mexican Gulf and the Pacific might be effected by joining the Coatzacoalcos and the Chicapa or Chimalapa, which latter rises close to the sources of the former and falls into the Gulf of Tehuantepec. Extensive harbor-works are now being constructed at the mouth of the Coatzacoalcos, which will materially aid in the service of transportation across the isthmus, in connection with the railway traversing that region. E. of the Coatzacoalcos are the Grijalva and Usumacinta rivers. The rivers flowing into the Pacific Ocean are, towards the S., all rapid, and important only as they water coasts more or less populous. The Rio de las Balsas, or Zacatula, descends from the state of Mexico, and, after collecting several large streams, reaches the ocean with a broad and deep channel, navigable for boats a good way up, and forms at its mouth the little harbor of Zacatula. About the middle of the Pacific coast is the Rio Grande de Santiago, or Rio Tolotlán (also known in its upper course as Rio Lerma), discharging the waters of Lake Chapala, the second in magnitude of the Mexican rivers.

The lakes of Mexico are numerous, but unimportant. The largest is Chapala, mostly in Jalisco, covering an area of some 1500 sq. m. Other lakes are Cuitzeo and Patzcuaro, both in the state of Michoacán; the Laguna de Parras, in the state of Coahuila; and the lakes of the valley of the city of Mexico,—Chalco, Xochimilco, Texcoco, San Cristóbal, Xaltocán, and Zumpango,—the overflows from which formerly at various times penetrated into the capital but which have recently been connected with a vast system of drainage canals and tunnels.

Climate.—Mexico has great diversities of climate within a relatively narrow compass. The Mexicans divide their country, with respect to climate, into tierras calientes (hot lands), which extend from the sea to about 3000 feet elevation; tierras templadas (temperate), ranging between 3000 and 5000–7000 ft.; and tierras frías (cold), above 7000 ft. The coasts are hot, humid, and in many parts unhealthy. The more elevated tracts of the middle zone are usually healthy and enjoy an agreeable temperature. The same is true of the great plateau, where, however, owing to the rarefaction of the atmosphere, many persons are never acclimated. The principal high plains in the vicinity of the city of Mexico are the valleys of Toluca, 8600 ft., of Tenochtitlán, 7400 ft., of Actópan, 6450 ft., and of Istla, 3200 ft. above sea-level. The maximum temperature recorded at Mérida (Yucatan), Mazatlán, and Colima is 105°. On the central plateau the summer heat rarely rises above 88°–90°; in winter the temperature only exceptionally falls much below the freezing-point. Snow, although in small quantity, is not absolutely infrequent in the city of Mexico. The rainfall over a considerable part of the plateau does not exceed 25 inches; at Monterey it has risen as high as 130 inches. Earthquakes are of frequent occurrence, particularly in Oaxaca and near the capital, but they are generally slight and do little damage. One of the most violent and destructive recorded was that of Jan., 1902, when the town of Chilpancingo, in Guerrero, was in great part destroyed.

Vegetable Products.—Mexico possesses a variety and abundance of vegetable products hardly equalled in any other portion of the earth. The forests near the coast display the grandest forms of tropical vegetation, among which may be enumerated a vast variety of palms and acacias, the giant wild fig- (or rubber-) tree, the rosewood, mahogany, Brazil-wood, Campeche-wood, ebony, yellow- and iron-wood, intermingled with elegant giant ferns and a wealth of orchidaceous plants. A zone of 4500–6000 feet elevation is largely that of evergreen oaks and melastomes, to which succeeds the region of the temperate flora, with pines, firs, and spruce, which form magnificent forests at elevations of 9000–10,000 ft. and continue to the timber-line at about 13,500 ft. Mexico is pre-eminently the home of the cactus, which occurs in an almost endless variety of forms, from the night-blooming cereus in the lower tierra caliente to the giant organ-cactus of the mountain-slopes of 6000 ft. elevation. Among the favorite fruits of Mexico are the mango, sapote, anona, pomegranate, papaw, orange, pineapple, cocoanut, and banana. The special products of cultivation are the sugar-cane, coffee, cacao, vanilla,—all in the region comprised between the seashore and elevations of 3000–4000 ft.,—and agave, or American aloe, the last-named in Yucatan cultivated for its fibre (Sisal hemp) and in major Mexico (plateau) for its "milk," which is fermented into the beverage known as pulque. Corn is very extensively grown on the plateau, and the cultivation of wheat has assumed large proportions. The chief agricultural crops in 1900 were stated in kilogrammes (the kilogramme = 2.2 pounds): wheat, 338,263,902; pure sugar, 75,055,798; molasses, 52,827,472; maize, 32,492,489; rice, 20,777,917; henequen (Sisal fibre), 87,613,966; cotton, 21,795,895; coffee, 21,088,123; cacao, 1,973,352; and tobacco, 9,343,561.

Animal Life.—The fauna of Mexico is extremely varied, comprising both temperate and tropical forms, and stands zoögeographically between the faunas of North and South America. Its mammalian forms include the jaguar, puma, bear, wolf, tapir, deer, anteater, sloth, armadillo, peccary, and numerous monkeys. Birds of fine plumage are very abundant (parrots, toucans, trogons, chatterers, jays, humming-birds), as are also serpents (boa, anaconda, rattlesnake) and saurians (iguana, alligator, crocodile).

Minerals.—The mineral wealth of Mexico is prodigious, and its silver- and gold-mines have been worked with varying degrees of energy, although with much interruption, almost from the days of the Spanish conquest. The other minerals include copper, lead, iron, quicksilver, tin, cobalt, antimony, and sulphur (vast deposits of the last-named being found more particularly in the crater of Popocatepetl). The total value of the ore output in the year 1902 was upward of $103,700,000 (Mexican money, the Mexican silver peso, or dollar, being equal to about 48 cents United States money). The quantity of silver obtained from the mines in 1902 was valued at $58,700,000 (Mexican); of gold, $14,392,106; of copper, $24,631,289. Among the more famous mining districts are those of Guanajuato, Zacatecas, and Catorce, to which must be added the extraordinarily rich region of Parral, in Chihuahua. A fairly extensive industry is carried on in opals (Querétaro) and in the exceedingly beautiful stalactitic marble known as "Mexican onyx" (state of Puebla).

Manufactures.—The leading manufactures of Mexico are those of distilled liquors, sugar, rum, and molasses, cotton and other textile fabrics, pottery, hats, boots and shoes, saddlery, jewelry, and tobacco. There were in 1901, 2211 distilleries and 721 tobacco-factories. The product of the latter was upward of 350,000,000 cases of cigarettes, besides 120,000,000 cigars and cheroots and 6,000,000 kilogrammes of tobacco. The cotton manufacture is rapidly becoming an important industry. In 1902 there were 155 cotton-spinning and weaving-mills, which consumed nearly 60,000,000 pounds of raw cotton.

Population, Government, etc.—The population of Mexico comprises persons of white descent, Indians, and mestizoes, or people of mixed race. In parts of the coast-country there is some admixture of African blood. The Spanish language is everywhere prevalent, but many of the Indians retain the use of the ancient languages. The great bulk of the people are of the Roman Catholic faith, but all religions are tolerated and there is no state church. Among the Indians there are some pagan tribes. Before the advent of the Spaniards some tribes, commonly designated Aztecs (with whom most ethnologists to-day unite the Toltecs) who spoke the Nahuatl language, and the Mayas, of Yucatan, had attained to a high degree of civilization. They were good smiths and masons, and had made some advance in the arts of design; they raised great edifices (palaces, temples, pyramids) and constructed vast works (roads, aqueducts, bridges, etc.); they had an accurate calendar, and, finally, they had a system of picture-writing. Monuments remain attesting their boldness of design and progress in the arts of construction. There are extensive remains of the city of Tenochtitlán, near the modern Mexico, with its dikes, aqueducts, and extraordinary pieces of sculpture. Oaxaca is rich in ancient remains, among which the chief are the palace and pyramid of the Zapotecas at Mitla. Another pyramid, or teocalli, is to be seen near Cholula. Near Villanueva, in Zacatecas, are the remarkable ruins known as Los Edificios. In Vera Cruz are the pyramids of Papantla, built of colossal masses of porphyry. The extensive ruins of Palenque and Lorillard City, in Chiapas, are well known, but they are equalled or surpassed by those of Uxmal and Chichenitza, in Yucatan, where also are found the remains of hundreds of villages and temple (?) sites (Izamal, Labna, etc.).

Mexico is a federal republic, framed largely upon the model of that of the United States. Its chief executive is a president, who is elected for a term of six years (the term was four years previous to 1904) by electors chosen by the people. He is assisted by a council and a cabinet of seven members. The departments are: foreign affairs, interior, justice and public instruction, fomento (colonization and industry), communications and public works, finance and public credit, and war and marine. The legislative branch of the government is vested in a congress consisting of a House of Representatives and a Senate. In the latter each state is represented by 2 members. The representatives and senators are chosen by indirect election for terms of 2 years and 4 years respectively. Each state elects its governor and has its own legislature. The names and population of the states (1900), together with their capitals, are here appended:

*Now divided into northern and southern territorial districts. The territory of Quintana Roo was organized in 1902

The population of the republic in 1900 was 13,604,923, of which number about 38 per cent. were Indians and less than 20 per cent. pure whites. There are numerous normal, professional, and technical schools, supported by the federal government or the individual states.

Commerce.—The foreign trade of Mexico has exhibited a rapid growth in recent years. The value of the exports in the year 1902–3 was about $97,000,000 (reckoned in gold dollars) and that of the imports about $76,000,000. The precious metals constitute on an average about half of the total exports. Among the other leading exports are copper, lead, Sisal fibre, coffee, tobacco, woods, and various vegetable products, animals, and animal products. Nearly three-fourths of the exports in the year 1902–3 went to the United States, which contributed about one-half of the imports. Of the European nations the English trade most largely with Mexico. There are more than 9000 miles of railroad in operation. The cities are supplied with tramways.

History.—Yucatan was visited by Solis and Pinzon in 1508 and major Mexico was discovered in 1518 by Francisco Hernandez de Córdova, who sailed westward along the coast from Cape Catoche. In 1519 Cortés, having conceived the project of conquering Mexico, landed where Vera Cruz now stands and ascended the table-land, the inhabitants of which, the Aztecs, he found united under a sovereign called Montezuma. After two years of warfare, Cortés succeeded in overturning the power of the Aztecs, and the smaller states were subjected to the Spaniards almost without a struggle. Cortés having firmly established his authority in the country, a considerable number of persons emigrated from Spain to Mexico, and there acquired great wealth in mining, as merchants, and as officers of government. In 1535 Antonio de Mendoza was appointed first viceroy of Mexico, or, as the region was officially called, New Spain. The viceroyalty of New Spain came to include a vast territory to the N. of the present Mexico. The country continued a Spanish possession for nearly three centuries. The first revolutionary rising took place in 1810, and was chiefly fomented by the clergy, under the lead of Hidalgo, who was executed in 1811. The struggle was continued by Morelos, who met a similar fate in 1815. The patriots soon found a brave leader in Guerrero. In 1821 the royalist commander Iturbide united with Guerrero in the so-called Plan of Igualada, by which Mexico was to be constituted an independent monarchy under a prince of the royal house of Spain. Nothing came of this scheme, but the independence of Mexico was assured, and in 1822, Iturbide was proclaimed emperor. Iturbide encountered such opposition that he resigned in 1823. The experiment of a monarchy having failed, the plan was now tried of a federal republic, framed, in many particulars, upon that of the United States, and a constitution was proclaimed in 1824. The first president was General Guadalupe Victoria. From 1828 the country was distracted by an endless succession of revolutions and civil wars. In 1835 there was a revolution in Texas against Mexican authority, and in 1836 its people achieved their independence. A dispute regarding the boundary of Texas led in 1846, during the presidency of Santa Anna, to a war between Mexico and the United States. In 1847 General Scott entered the city of Mexico. By the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, concluded in Feb., 1848, Mexico ceded to the United States the provinces of New Mexico (including the greater part of the present Arizona and New Mexico, all of Utah and Nevada, and part of Colorado and Wyoming) and Upper California. In 1854 the United States purchased from Mexico a large strip of territory, the Gadsden Purchase, included in the present Arizona and New Mexico. In 1862–63 a French army invaded Mexico and occupied the capital. Under the auspices of Napoleon III. an imperial government was inaugurated, with Maximilian of Austria, brother of the emperor Francis Joseph, at its head. The republicans gathered under the banner of the able Juarez, an Indian by blood. Maximilian was emperor from 1864 until 1867, when he was shot and the republic was again proclaimed, with Juarez as president. The remarkable recent development of Mexico as a nation is chiefly the history of the administration of Porfirio Diaz, who has been at the head of the government since the close of 1876, with the exception of the period from 1880 to 1884.

Mexico, a state of the republic of Mexico, having S. Morelos and Guerrero, and on the other sides the states of Michoacan, Querétaro, Hidalgo, Tlaxcala, and Puebla, nearly enclosing the federal district of Mexico. Area, 8950 sq. m. Pop. in 1900, 934,463. The major portion, which is productive and well cultivated, is comprised within the great central plateau, and it contains part of the lofty summits of Popocatepetl, and Ixtaccihuatl, and the Nevado de Toluca. It is watered by the Balsas and Lerma rivers. Silver and other metals are found. Capital, Toluca.

Mexico, the capital of the Mexican republic, the finest and most imposing city of Latin America, and one of the most attractive cities of the Western Hemisphere, forms part of the Federal District, and is situated on the plain of Anahuac, at an elevation of about 7350 feet. Lat. 19° 26′ N.; lon. 99° 8′ W. It is the converging point of several trunk-lines of railway, and is 263 miles by rail almost due W. of Vera Cruz and 1225 miles SSE. of El Paso, Tex. Its lofty position in a tropical region insures to it a climate of marked equability and one exceptionally pleasant to those who are not affected by the rarity of the atmosphere. The average annual temperature is about 58°, the mean temperature of summer being 60°–65° and of midwinter, 53°. The extreme heat of summer is never excessive, while in winter the thermometer only exceptionally marks below 40°–42°. Light falls of snow occasionally take place. The average annual precipitation is about 20 inches.

Few cities of the world occupy a more charming location than Mexico, with its magnificent view of the giant snow-clad Popocatepetl and Ixtaccihuatl in the SE. and the rugged Ajusco Mountains in the S. At the period of the Spanish Conquest the city (then known as Tenochtitlán) occupied part of a lake-basin, the extension in greater part of the modern lakes Texcoco and Xochimilco, and was approached by causeways. The recession or desiccation of the lake-waters has long since deprived the city of its lacustrine character, and an interval of about 2 miles now intervenes between the eastern quarters and the border of Lake Texcoco. The completion in 1898 of the great drainage canal, one of the most remarkable of modern engineering works, by which the overflow waters of the threatening lagoon-lakes of the vicinity (Texcoco, Chalco, Xochimilco, San Cristóbal, Xaltocán, and Zumpango) are discharged into the Gulf of Mexico, has virtually freed the city from all danger of back-waters, which at several times in the past had proved so destructive to both life and property, and has vastly improved its healthfulness by providing an outlet for its sewage.

The focus of the city is the Plaza Mayor (or Plaza de Armas), the great square, on whose sides are the Spanish Renaissance cathedral, one of the largest and most sumptuous ecclesiastical structures of America, begun in 1573 and measuring 426 feet in length; the vast pile of the National Palace, 675 ft. in length; and the Palacio Municipal (or city-hall). The cathedral, which contains an altar-piece and choir of rare magnificence, occupies the site of the temple of Huitzilopochtli, the titular god of the Aztecs. A portion of the Plaza Mayor is occupied by the Zocalo (or minor green). The buildings of the city, in the main of fairly massive construction, for the most part do not exceed one or two stories in height and are built with the central court familiar in Spanish architecture. A marked contrast is exhibited by the dingy and mean houses of the old quarters and the modernized, almost palatial, edifices of the newer sections, where the stores and store-fronts partake of the attractive form of the similar structures of the European capitals. The principal arteries of traffic are the Via (or Calle) San Francisco, continued by the Calle de Pláteros, and the Calle Cinco de Mayo. Leading out from the attractive park and promenade known as the Alameda, the gathering-place of the fashion and aristocracy of the capital, is the Paseo de la Reforma, a magnificent boulevard, somewhat over 2 miles in length, richly decorated with sculptural groups (Charles IV., Columbus, Cuauhtemoc, etc.), and conducting to the hill, palace, and military school of Chapultepec. Among the city's more notable public buildings and institutions are the national museum, with an almost priceless collection of Aztec antiquities, the national picture-gallery and Academy of San Carlos, national library (with upward of 250,000 volumes), school of mines, mint, schools of medicine and engineering, observatory, the magnificent new national theatre, and the Monte de Piedad (or national pawnshop). Mexico is the seat of numerous scientific and literary associations. It gave to the New World the first newspaper, the Mercurio Volante, the first public school, and the earliest academy of fine arts. The manufactures of the city are still not very important, although they comprise a fairly wide range of articles,—cottons, linens, silks, paper, pottery, gold- and silver-wares, hats, leather, feather articles, carriages, brick and tile, soap, etc. Among the better-known resorts and suburbs of the immediate vicinity, most of them readily reached by an admirable system of electric and other tramways, are Tacubaya, San Ángel, Coyoacán, Guadalupe, and Santa Anita (on the Viga Canal). Pop. in 1900, 344,721.

Mexico, Federal District of, consists of the city of Mexico and some surrounding territory, in all covering about 570 (or 463) sq. m. Pop. in 1900, 541,516. Capital, Mexico city.

Mexico, Gulf of, a large indentation on the E. coast of North America, washing the shores of Mexico and the United States, measuring about 1100 miles from E. to W. and 800 miles in greatest width from N. to S. It is partly formed by the peninsulas of Florida and Yucatan, nearly in a line between which lies the island of Cuba, leaving a communication on its N. with the Atlantic through the Florida Straits or Channel, and on its S. with the Caribbean Sea through the Channel of Yucatan. It receives a number of important rivers, the principal of which are the Mississippi, the Rio Grande, Colorado of Texas, Brazos, Sabine, Mobile, and Apalachicola. The gulf, excepting in the shallows, which to the 200-fathom line continue the coasts of Florida, Yucatan, and Louisiana far into the area of the basin, is free from banks, and contains only a few small rocky islands on the coasts of Yucatan, with the Florida Reef near its E. extremity. The shores are low and generally lined with flat, sandy and coral islands—not far from the land—and numerous lagoons. There are few really good harbors, the most important harbors or ports being those of Key West, Tampa, Pensacola, Mobile, Galveston, Tampico, Vera Cruz, Coatzacoalcos, and Havana, and the rivers which fall into the gulf are obstructed by bars at their mouths, which render them all, except the Mississippi, nearly inaccessible for vessels of large draught. A current of water entering the gulf from the Caribbean Sea is soon divided into two portions, the one running E. along the coast of Cuba, the other W. in a curved line through the middle of the gulf and around towards the Florida Channel, where it meets the other current, and the two united form the Gulf Stream. (See Gulf Stream.) The greatest depth is about 12,750 feet. The deeper oceanic plain or floor of the gulf has been designated Sigsbee's Deep.

Michael, a post-station of Grant co., Ind.

Michaelsville, a post-hamlet of Harford co., Md., 3 miles from Perryman.

Michaux, me'shōz', a post-station of Powhatan co., Va.

Michel, a post-village of British Columbia. The banking point is Fernie, 25 miles distant. It has coaling interests.

Michelet, mish'lä', a village of Algeria, near Fort National, about 60 miles E. by S. of Algiers.

Michelsberg, mĭĸ'ęls-bĕrg', a town of Bohemia, 30 miles WNW. of Pilsen. Pop. about 1000.

Michelstadt, mĭĸ'ęl-städt', a town of Germany, in Hesse, 21 miles SE. of Darmstadt. Pop. in 1900, 3224.

Michie, a post-station of Bay co., Mich.

Michiels-Gestel, mee'нeels нĕs'tęl, a village of the Netherlands, in North Brabant, on the Dommel, 4½ miles S. of Bois-le-Duc.

Michigamme, mish-ę-gam'me, a banking post-village of Marquette co., Mich., on a lake of its own name and on the Chicago and Northwestern and the Duluth, South Shore and Atlantic Rs., 37 miles W. of Marquette. It is supported by iron-mines. Pop. about 1000.

Michigamme (or Michigaming) River, Mich., rises near the E. border of Houghton co. and unites with the Bois Brulé River to form the Menomonee.

Michigan, mish'e-gan, one of the north-central states of the American Union, consisting of two detached peninsulas, of which the northern (the Upper Peninsula) has Lake Superior on the N., Whitefish (or Tequamenon) Bay and St. Mary's River (separating it from Ontario) on the E., and lakes Huron and Michigan and the state of Wisconsin on the S.; while the southern (the Lower Peninsula) is bounded on the E. by lakes Huron, St. Clair, and Erie, and the St. Clair and Detroit rivers (forming part of the boundary with Ontario), on the W. by Lake Michigan, and on the S. by the states of Ohio and Indiana, its northern angle reaching the Strait of Mackinac, which separates it from the Upper Peninsula. The state includes numerous islands, of which the largest are Isle Royale and Grand Island in Lake Superior, Drummond and Bois Blanc islands in Lake Huron, and the Manitou group in Lake Michigan. Michigan extends through nearly 6 degrees of latitude, from the parallel of 41° 42′ N. to that of 47° 32′. Area of the land-surface, 57,430 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—The Lower Peninsula is the principal seat of wealth and population. Its characteristic features are the extensive forests of white pine and deciduous timber-trees in the N., the sand-dunes of the western lake-coast, the bluffy shores of Lake Huron, with its deeply indenting Saginaw Bay, and the picturesque oak openings or natural parks of the centre and S. This peninsula is a very level, fruitful region, abounding in lakes and streams, the latter (Ausable, Cheboygan, Grand, Huron, Kalamazoo, Muskegon, Raisin) not large, but in many cases navigable to a considerable extent, while others afford much water-power. The streams of the northern forests are much resorted to in the season for the trout and grayling which here abound. The undulating surface culminates in a ridge or water-shed which hardly rises 300 feet above the lake-level (580 feet), and there are occasional conical hills or knolls. The Upper Peninsula has in general a rough or mountainous surface, a markedly temperate or even cold climate, and a niggardly soil; but its mineral wealth is remarkable. Its mountains (Porcupine and Mineral ranges), though rugged, have not a great absolute elevation (Porcupine Mountain, 2023 feet, the culminating point of the state), and in some portions the forests are a source of wealth. The largest streams in this section are the Escanaba, Ford, Manistique, Ontonagon, and Tequamenon.

Geology and Minerals.—The Upper Peninsula consists of a central area of Archæan or Laurentian and Huronian age, flanked to the E. and SE. on the one hand and to the W. and NW. on the other by extensive fields of Silurian and Cambrian strata. The Archæan region, or that which has been more recently designated "Algonkian," affords immense beds of rich magnetite and red hematite (Penokee-Gogebic and Marquette-Menominee series) of unrivalled purity and excellence. This is quarried and shipped by lake and by rail, and is largely smelted in the iron-works of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, etc., and is also wrought in the furnaces erected on the spot. Michigan holds second place among the states of the Union as a producer of iron, the product in 1903 having been 10,600,330 long tons, of which 10,592,933 tons were red hematite and 7397 tons magnetite. The product in 1901 was 9,654,057 tons. The value of the iron-product of 1903 was $25,483,075, averaging $2.40 per ton (about 10,500,000 tons). In the northwestern Cambrian district, upon the Keweenaw peninsula, which projects into Lake Superior, and to the SW., extend the Mineral Mountains (or Copper Range), where large masses of pure and nearly pure native copper are mined, with occasional veins richly alloyed with silver. These are among the most valuable copper-mines in the United States. The copper-mines of Isle Royale belong to this geological formation, and on the Canadian side of Lake Superior the Algoma country affords not less rich deposits of the same mineral. Abundant evidence exists in the copper region that the mines were wrought in prehistoric times and the native copper implements of the old mound-builders were very probably derived from this source. The production of copper in the Upper Peninsula, in 1901, was 69,772 long tons.

The geological features of the Lower Peninsula are very different from those of the Upper. Devonian and Carboniferous strata cover most of this, the main, part of the state. The coal measures extend over an area of several thousand square miles and furnish much valuable mineral. The quantity of coal mined in 1903 was 1,367,619 short tons, virtually all bituminous. Salt is extensively manufactured from the waters of artesian wells. The product of the state in 1904 somewhat exceeded 5,400,000 barrels. Petroleum has been obtained to some extent, especially northward, and inflammable oil-bearing shales, both Devonian and Carboniferous, are abundant at various points. Useful mineral waters are reported in nearly all parts of the Lower Peninsula. Gypsum, for land-plaster and for stucco-work, lime, glass-sand, grindstones, fire-clay, and building-stones (sandstones and marbles) are among the useful mineral products. A large portion of the surface of the Lower Peninsula is covered with glacial drift.

Objects of Interest to Tourists.—Among these are the famous Pictured Rocks of wind- and wave-worn sandstone on Lake Superior; the iron- and copper-mines; the canal and rapids of Sault Ste. Marie, on the St. Mary's River, the outlet of Lake Superior, and the remarkable artificial channel and works for the improvement of navigation through the flats in Lake St. Clair. Mackinaw, Mount Clemens, Ottawa Beach, and Petoskey are favorite resorts.

Agricultural Resources.—Few sections of the United States excel the Lower Peninsula of Michigan as a farming region. The oak openings and dry prairies were first settled; the wet prairie-lands followed, their drainage proving easy, profitable, and advantageous to public health. The forest lands, when subdued, proved to be among the best wheat lands known. In the W. and SW. occurs the great fruit-belt of the state, where the proximity of Lake Michigan so tempers the west winds that even the peach succeeds admirably. As far N. as Grand Traverse the climate is not too cold for successful agriculture. The winter wheat, oats, and potatoes of the state are of excellent quality and are produced abundantly. The yield of the chief crops cultivated in 1900 was: corn, 38,888,460 bushels; wheat, 9,271,764 bushels; oats, 33,689,536 bushels; barley, 904,806 bushels; rye, 1,041,068 bushels; potatoes, 16,630,941 bushels; and hay, 1,727,617 tons. Other leading products are butter, cheese, wool, beef, pork, buckwheat, hay, beans, peas, hops, flax, flaxseed, clover- and grass-seeds, maple sugar, wax, honey, sorghum and maple syrups, etc. Excellent horses and cattle are bred for the Eastern markets. Grape-culture is successful in the S. and wine is a noteworthy product. Of the Upper Peninsula the resources are comparatively undeveloped.

Climate.—The climate of Michigan is marked by extremes of winter temperature, the thermometer in some sections not infrequently marking —20° to —30°. The summers are warm but not excessively hot, the maximum temperature being about 100°. The mean annual rainfall is about 30 inches.

Lumber and Manufactures.—Besides pine, Michigan cuts much oak, maple, and other hard timber, as well as spruce, hackmatack, hemlock, and other kinds of coarse lumber. The S. side of the Upper Peninsula is admirably adapted to the lumber-business, having unlimited water-power and waters available for navigation, with large forests as yet comparatively untouched. The state holds after Wisconsin the first place among the lumber-producing states of the Union. The production of pine-lumber in 1900 was 1,134,481,000 feet; of hemlock, 732,269,000 ft.; of hard-wood, 512,201,000 ft. The output of shingles alone was 1,155,728,000. The total area covered by forest lands in 1900 was 38,000 sq. m. Among the forest products are tanners' bark, bark-extract, charcoal, and potash. Manufactures of wooden-ware, furniture, and other similar goods are carried on upon an immense scale in the cities of Michigan. Reference has already been made to the important manufactures of iron, salt, etc. To these must be added the manufacture of farm-implements, leather and leather goods, woollens, cottons, machinery, hollow-ware, castings, etc. The manufacture of beet-sugar is now an important industry of the state. In 1899 there were 1355 cigar- and tobacco-factories in operation, turning out a product of 164,576,350 cigars and 15,129,215 pounds of tobacco. The values of the products of the chief industries in 1900 were: lumber and timber products, $83,121,969; flouring products, $22,778,829; foundry- and machine-shop products, $13,363,030; furniture, $10,767,038; carriages and wagons, $5,699,941; and iron and steel, $5,829,843.

Commerce.—The extent of lake coast is far larger than that of any other state. Good natural harbors exist on the shores of all three lakes and many of the river-mouths and coast-lagoons have been converted by artificial means into safe and excellent harbors. Notwithstanding the existence of numerous railroads, the lake commerce still thrives and is especially adapted to the shipment of coal, iron-ore, lumber, and other bulky freights. Detroit, Marquette, Port Huron, and Grand Haven are ports of entry, and Superior, Ashland, and Gladstone subports of entry. The catch of white-fish, trout, grayling, herring (so called), pickerel, sturgeon, and other fish is very important.

The railroads of Michigan in 1846 measured 238 miles; in 1850, 342 miles; in 1860, 779 miles; in 1870, 1638 miles; in 1880, 3935 miles; in 1890, 7106 miles; and in 1900, 8240 miles.

Counties, etc.—There are 83 counties: Alcona, Alger, Allegan, Alpena, Antrim, Arenac, Baraga, Barry, Bay, Benzie, Berrien, Branch, Calhoun, Cass, Charlevoix, Cheboygan, Chippewa, Clare, Clinton, Crawford, Delta, Dickinson, Eaton, Emmet, Genesee, Gladwin, Gogebic, Grand Traverse, Gratiot, Hillsdale, Houghton, Huron, Ingham, Ionia, Iosco, Iron, Isabella, Jackson, Kalamazoo, Kalkaska, Kent, Keweenaw, Lake, Lapeer, Leelanau, Lenawee, Livingston, Luce, Mackinac, Macomb, Manistee, Marquette, Mason, Mecosta, Menominee, Midland, Missaukee, Monroe, Montcalm, Montmorency, Muskegon, Newaygo, Oakland, Oceana, Ogemaw, Ontonagon, Osceola, Oscoda, Otsego, Ottawa, Presque Isle, Roscommon, Saginaw, St. Clair, St. Joseph, Sanilac, Schoolcraft, Shiawassee, Tuscola, Van Buren, Washtenaw, Wayne, and Wexford.

The principal cities are Detroit (pop. in 1900, 285,704), Grand Rapids (87,565), Saginaw (42,345), Bay City (27,628), Jackson (25,180), Kalamazoo (24,404), Muskegon (20,818), Port Huron, (19,158), Battle Creek (18,563), Lansing, the capital (16,485), Manistee, West Bay City, Ann Arbor, and Flint.

Education.—The state maintains normal schools at Mount Pleasant, Marquette, and Ypsilanti, and there are normal training and collegiate institutions in other cities and towns. The state university, or University of Michigan, with full faculties in science and art, law and medicine, is located at Ann Arbor and is one of the leading educational institutions of the country. The state agricultural college is near Lansing and the Michigan College of Mines at Houghton. Other collegiate institutions are Adrian, Albion, Alma, Detroit, Hillsdale, Kalamazoo, etc., colleges, in the towns indicated by their names. At Coldwater is a state school for the children of paupers; a reform school and school for the blind at Lansing; one for deaf-mutes at Flint; and an industrial home for girls at Adrian. Other public institutions are the state prison at Jackson and the state insane asylum at Kalamazoo, and other asylums at Pontiac, Traverse City, and Newberry.

Government.—The governor and the members of the legislature are elected every two years. The state has 12 representatives in the lower house of the federal Congress.

Population.—In 1810 the population was 4762; in 1820, 8896; in 1830, 31,639; in 1840, 212,267; in 1850, 397,654; in 1860, 749,113; in 1870, 1,184,059; in 1880, 1,636,937; in 1890, 2,093,889; in 1900, 2,420,982. About one-fifth of the inhabitants are foreign-born, the Canadians and Germans being the most numerous of the foreign-born inhabitants.

History.—In the second half of the seventeenth century the French established mission stations and posts on the shores of Michigan, and in 1701 they made a settlement at Detroit. The country passed, with Canada, into English hands in 1763. Then followed the conspiracy of Pontiac, the destruction of Mackinac, and the siege of Detroit. As a result of the Revolutionary War the English relinquished possession of the region, although they did not evacuate it until 1796. In 1805 the Michigan Territory was constituted out of the old Northwest Territory. Its boundaries at one time extended westward to the Missouri River. In 1837 the state of Michigan was admitted to the Union with its present limits. The territory was the scene of active operations during a part of the war of 1812–15.

Michigan, a banking post-village of Nelson co., N.Dak., on the Great Northern R., 10 miles E. of Lakota. Pop. in 1900, 309.

Michigan Bar, a post-village of Sacramento co., Cal., on the Cosumne River, 28 miles E. by S. of Sacramento. Pop. 60.

Michigan Bluff, a post-village of Placer co., Cal., on the Middle Fork of the American River, about 56 miles ENE. of Sacramento. Pop. about 350.

Michigan Center, a post-village of Jackson co., Mich., on the Michigan Central R., 4 miles E. of Jackson. Pop. 130.

Michigan City, a city of Laporte co., Ind., on Lake Michigan, about 38 miles (direct) ESE. of Chicago, on the Michigan Central and other railroads. It contains the Northern State Prison and has manufactures of railroad-cars, chairs, furniture, lumber, shirts, barrels, gloves, hosiery, etc. Here are workshops of the railroads which converge at this point. Pop. in 1880, 5366; in 1890, 10,776; in 1900, 14,850.

Michigan City, a post-village of Benton co., Miss., 6 miles by rail SW. of Grand Junction, Tenn. Pop. in 1900, 70.

Michigan, Lake, the largest lake which is entirely included within the United States. It is one of the five Great Lakes the waters of which enter the sea through the St. Lawrence River. It forms the E. boundary of Wisconsin and the W. boundary of the Lower Peninsula of Michigan, and touches parts of Illinois and Indiana. It extends from lat. 41° 35′ to 46° N. and is about 335 miles long. The broadest part, which is opposite Milwaukee, is nearly 90 miles wide. Elevation, 581 feet above sea-level. Area, about 22,500 sq. m. The greatest depth is 900–1000 feet. Green Bay, extending into Wisconsin, is a long arm of the lake in the NW. The shores are generally low. This lake is connected at its NE. extremity with Lake Huron by the Strait of Mackinac, which is its outlet. The principal cities on its shores are Kenosha, Racine, Milwaukee, Sheboygan, Manitowoc, Menominee, Marinette, and Greenbay, in Wisconsin; Escanaba, Manistee, Ludington, and Grand Haven, in Michigan; Chicago and Evanston, in Illinois; and Michigan City, in Indiana. The lake encloses but few islands (Manitou Islands), which are in the northern part. The largest rivers that flow into the lake are the St. Joseph, Kalamazoo, Grand, Muskegon, Manistee, Menomonee, and Fox. The waters of Lake Michigan are placed in communication with those of the Mississippi system by means of the Chicago and Illinois rivers and connecting canals. See Chicago River.

Milan, mil'an or mil-an' (It. Milano, me-lȧ'no; Ger. Mailand, mī'lânt; anc. Mediola'num), the largest city of Lombardy and the second city in size of Italy, capital of a province of its own name, 75 miles ENE. of Turin. Lat. of the Brera observatory, 45° 27′ 59″ N.; lon. 9° 11′ 30″ E. It is situated in a beautiful and fertile plain, on the navigable Olona, between the Adda and Ticino, which, in this part of their course, feed three separate canals, one of which, the Naviglio Grande (or "Great Canal"), encircling a considerable portion of the interior of the city, divides it into two unequal parts, while the other two, on the outside, are available both for irrigation and traffic. Milan is built in the form of an irregular polygon, and is surrounded by canals, which were once flanked with massive bastions. These have been almost entirely removed, and the space occupied by them and the earthen ramparts has been converted into shaded promenades. The city is 7 miles in circumference and is entered by several gates. The Piazza d'Armi, a large space obtained by the demolition of the citadel and its outworks, has in greater part been converted into a public park.

The focus of the busy life of the city is the Piazza del Duomo, on which stands the celebrated cathedral (duomo), Mariæ Nascenti, the largest church of Europe after St. Peter's at Rome and the cathedral of Seville, and one of the most magnificent specimens of Gothic architecture. The edifice, constructed of white marble, the erection of which was begun in 1387, covers an area of 14,000 square yards and is capable of accommodating 40,000 people. The interior measures 486 feet in length. The exterior presents a unique appearance, with its more than 2000 statues, its many pinnacles, and its exquisite carvings. The other remarkable structures are the church of Sant' Ambrogio, erected on the site of a church founded by St. Ambrose about 387, which contains so many ancient epitaphs and other relics as to form a rich museum of Christian antiquities; the church of Sant' Eustorgio, with interesting monuments; the church of Santa Maria delle Grazie, belonging to the suppressed monastery of Santa Maria delle Grazie, in whose refectory is the celebrated "Last Supper," by Leonardo da Vinci; the church of Santa Maria della Passione, with a magnificent mausoleum; the church of San Lorenzo, the most ancient church of Milan; the Palazzo Reale; the archiepiscopal palace (dating from 1565), adjoining the cathedral; the Palazzo Marino, the seat of the municipio; the former Palazzo della Ragione, now the corn exchange, situated in the Piazza de' Mercanti, the central point of the mediæval city; the Palazzo di Giustizia; the Galleria Vittorio Emanuele, a beautiful and costly arcade-building, occupied by shops, and measuring 320 yards in length; the mint; the barracks, forming a long and elegant range of buildings, capable of holding 4000 men; the prisons, one of which is regarded as a model of its kind; the house of correction at Porta Nuova; the vast arena; and a great number of theatres, among which that called La Scala, dating from 1778, and one of the most famous of Europe, takes precedence, accommodating 3600 spectators.

The chief scientific and educational institutions are the Brera, now known as the Palazzo di Scienze, Lettere ed Arti, dating from 1651, and containing a library of about 230,000 volumes, valuable manuscripts, a picture-gallery rich in the choicest productions of the old Italian masters, an astronomical and magnetical observatory, considered the finest in Italy, and an archæological museum; the Museo Poldi-Pezzoli; the Ambrosian Library, with 185,000 volumes and 8500 manuscripts; the Trivulzio Library, the royal cabinet of coins, the municipal museum of natural history, the royal scientific and literary academy, royal technical institute, schools of medicine, agriculture, and veterinary science, a higher commercial institute, several learned societies, and a military geographical institute. Among the benevolent endowments is the Ospedale Maggiore, one of the largest hospitals in the world. The city is ornamented with a number of monumental sculptures, the best known of which is the equestrian statue, on the Piazza del Duomo, of Victor Emmanuel II., erected in 1896. Milan is the seat of an archbishop.

From its position on the great routes across the Alps and its connection by canals with the principal rivers of Italy, Milan is favorably situated for trade. Its manufactures comprise silks, velvets, ribbons, lace, cotton and woollen goods, carpets, jewelry, glass, paper, porcelain, gloves, carriages, art-furniture, and machinery. It is the chief publishing centre and book mart of Italy.

Milan is very ancient. It rose to great importance under the later Roman emperors. In the latter part of the fourth century, when it was occupied by Saint Ambrose, the bishopric of Milan was one of the most important of the episcopal sees. In the twelfth century Milan was the most powerful of the city republics of northern Italy which waged war against the emperor Frederick Barbarossa. About a century and a half later the city fell under the rule of the powerful family of the Visconti. In 1395 Milan with its territory was erected into a duchy for this house, whose dominions finally embraced a great part of Lombardy. The Visconti dynasty ended in 1447 and in 1450 the ducal house of Sforza was established. During the period 1499–1525 the duchy was repeatedly in the hands of the French. In 1535, on the extinction of the Sforza dynasty, it was taken possession of by the emperor Charles V., who united it with the crown of Spain. The Milanese (territory of Milan) was ceded by Spain to Austria in 1713–14. (See Lombardy.) Milan was the capital of the short-lived kingdom of Italy established by Napoleon (1805–14). Pop. in 1901, 491,460.

Milwaukee, the most populous city of Wisconsin, a port of entry and county seat of Milwaukee co., is situated on the W. shore of Lake Michigan, at the mouth of the Milwaukee River, 89 miles N. of Chicago, on the Chicago and Northwestern, the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, the Wisconsin Central, and the Pere Marquette Rs. Lat. 43° 3′ N.; lon. 87° 57′ W. Milwaukee harbor is now one of the best harbors on the Great Lakes and the largest vessels can approach quite to the warehouses. The city is advantageously situated along the banks of the Milwaukee River and the Menomonee and Kinnickinnick tributaries, and the transportation facilities afforded by these waterways have made it one of the chief manufacturing and commercial centres of the north-central section of the Union. The chief articles of its extensive commerce are grain (wheat, barley, corn, oats, rye), flour, and lumber. Its grain-elevators have a capacity of over 6,000,000 bushels. The product of the flouring-mills, whose capacity ranks immediately after those of Minneapolis, is frequently 10,000 barrels per day. One of the most prominent industries is that of beer-brewing, the Milwaukee lager beer being known throughout the entire United States, the annual production of this beverage being between 2,000,000 and 2,500,000 barrels. Other important industries are represented in vast rolling-mills and machine-shops, slaughtering and packing establishments, and manufactories of engines, knit goods, leather, lumber, carriages, furniture, agricultural implements, tobacco, bricks, etc. The residence portions of the city, on high ground above the busy valleys along the streams, are noted for their beautiful shaded avenues (Grand and Prospect Avenues, Waverley Place, etc.) and elegant homes. Milwaukee contains many fine public and educational edifices, among the most prominent of which are the Federal building (erected in 1896–98), the city-hall, county court-house, chamber of commerce, exposition building (with a museum and state fish-hatchery), Layton Art Gallery, and the stately new Public Library and Museum (containing about 150,000 volumes). The city has a state normal school, an industrial school for girls, and various collegiate institutions (Concordia, Marquette, and the Milwaukee Downer Colleges), and in the vicinity is a National Soldiers' Home. The city has a number of attractive parks (Lake, Washington, Juneau, Humboldt, Riverside, etc.), some of which contain fine monumental works. The Forest Home Cemetery ranks as one of the most beautiful burying-grounds of the United States. Milwaukee was settled in 1835 and incorporated as a city in 1846. Other public buildings are the chamber of commerce, the Union depot, lumber exchange, masonic temple, public library and art-gallery (with about 150,000 volumes and collections of paintings and natural history), etc. Here is the seat of the University of Minnesota, non-sectarian and providing free tuition and equal privileges for both sexes. It was founded in 1851 and has several colleges, faculties of arts, chemistry, engineering, agriculture, mining, medicine, etc., a library of 85,000 volumes, a vast campus, and, connected with its agricultural college, an experiment farm. The attendance at the university in 1903–04 was 3825, including 106 graduate students. Here are also the Augsburg Theological Seminary and the medical department of Hamline University (St. Paul). There are in addition many private and parochial schools, a conservatory of music, and the Minnesota Normal School. Besides its opera-houses and first-class theatres, Minneapolis has several music and assembly halls. The city covers an area of 54 sq. m. and is embellished with upward of 20 parks, of which Minnehaha Park, about 5 miles S., embraces the famous Minnehaha Falls. Lake Minnetonka, a few miles away and accessible by several lines of railroad, is a favorite summer-resort. By its electric-car system, complete within its own limits, Minneapolis has frequent communication with St. Paul. With its magnificent water-power, it now ranks as one of the leading manufacturing cities of the country. In flour and lumber products it is the foremost city of the world, its numerous flour-mills having a daily capacity of 80,000 barrels. The quantity of lumber cut by the Minneapolis mills in 1901 was 578,000,000 feet. The city is one of the largest wheat-marts in the world, upward of 80,000,000 bushels of wheat having been received in the course of a single year. Its general manufacturing industries include car-building and the making of machinery, iron goods, malted liquors, etc. Pop. in 1870, 13,066, or including St. Anthony (incorporated with Minneapolis in 1873), 18,079; in 1880, 46,887; in 1890, 164,738; in 1900, 202,718. Minneapolis, which in 1854 had only about 500 inhabitants, was incorporated as a town in 1856 and as a city in 1867.

Minnedosa, a banking post-town of Manitoba, on the Canadian Pacific R., 78 miles NW. of Portage La Prairie. Pop. in 1901, 1052.

Min'neha'ha, a county in the SE. part of South Dakota, borders on Minnesota. Area, 802 sq. m. It is intersected by the Big Sioux River. Capital, Sioux Falls. Pop. in 1890, 21,879; in 1900, 23,926.

Minnehaha, Falls of the, a picturesque water-fall in a small glen about 5 miles S. of Minneapolis, Minn., and embraced within a town-park belonging to that city. Height, 50 feet. The fall has been immortalized by Longfellow.

Min'neis'ka, a river of Minnesota, enters the Mississippi River at the village of Minneiska.

Minneiska, a post-village of Wabasha co., Minn., on the Mississippi River and on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R., at the mouth of the Minneiska River, 16 miles NW. of Winona. Pop. in 1900, 372.

Minneola, a post-village of Lake co., Fla., on the Atlantic Coast Line and the Tavares and Gulf R. The banking point is Leesburg. Pop. 100.

Minneola, Tex. See MINEOLA.

Minneota, a banking post-village of Lyon co., Minn., on the Chicago and Northwestern R., 13 miles NW. of Marshall. Pop. in 1900, 777.

Minnequa, min-ne-kwaw′, a post-station and summer-resort of Bradford co., Pa., on the Northern Central R., 41 miles N. by E. of Williamsport. Here are mineral springs.

Min'neso'ta, a state of the American Union, in the N. part of the Mississippi Valley, bounded on the N. by Manitoba and Ontario, on the E. by Lake Superior and the state of Wisconsin, on the S. by Iowa, and on the W. by the states of North Dakota and South Dakota. Its extreme northern limit is lat. 49° N. (except that there is a small detached area NW. of the Lake of the Woods, with a few islands in that lake, lying N. of that parallel). Eastward from the Lake of the Woods the line ascends Rainy Lake River and a chain of lakes and streams to Mountain Lake, whence it passes by a very short portage to the headwaters of the Arrow River, which stream it follows to Pigeon River, down which it passes to Pigeon Bay, Lake Superior. The rivers St. Croix and Mississippi constitute the principal portion of the eastern line, S. of the point where it leaves Lake Superior. The southern limit is lat. 43° 30′ N. On the W. the state has the Red River of the North, with Lakes Traverse and Big Stone, southward from which the boundary-line follows the meridian of 96° 25′ W. Area of the land-surface, 79,205 sq. m.; of the appertaining waters, 4160 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—The surface of the state is in the main composed of undulating plains diversified by knolls and an abundance of lakes and tarns. There are no true mountain elevations except in the NE., where the Mesaba (or Mesabi) Range attains 2400 feet. Brule (or Brulé) Mountain, in the extreme NE., rises to 2044 feet. Conspicuous features are the great marshes of the NE., covered with a small growth of tamarack and fir, with low, parallel, pine-clad ridges of dry land; the great white-pine belt, which covers nearly one-third of the state, chiefly northeastward of the Mississippi River, and extends indefinitely northward; the "Big Woods," a strip of forest-land, covered with oak, elm, maple, ash, and other deciduous trees, stretching southward from the Crow Wing River to within about 60 miles of the Iowa boundary-line; the productive and beautiful rolling country in the SE.; the great undulating prairies of the S. and SW., gradually ascending to the northwest-central "Height of Land," or Hauteur des Terres. From the remotest source of the Mississippi (height, 1600 feet) the country falls somewhat rapidly northward, the Lake of the Woods being only 1060 ft. in elevation and the Red River at St. Vincent only 787 ft. Much of the Red River valley is a dead level. The most remarkable ascent in the state is from Lake Superior (600 ft.) to the crest or edge of its surrounding plateau (1359 ft.), the ascent of 759 ft. being made in a few miles. The lowest point on the Mississippi has an elevation of 630 ft.

Hydrography.—A remarkable feature of Minnesota is formed by its myriads of clear lakes, varying in size from a few acres up to great bodies of water like Leech, Red, Millelacs, Cass, Vermilion, and other lakes, some of them singly covering hundreds of square miles. The lakes are said to exceed 7000 in number. They are conspicuously frequent along the divides or water-sheds. Lake Itasca (1460 ft.) is the receptacle of the streams that give birth to the Mississippi. The northeastern border of the state is in the St. Lawrence basin, the N. and NW. in that of Hudson Bay, the extreme SW. in the valley of the Missouri, but the greater part of the state is in the valley proper of the upper Mississippi. Many of the lakes, especially in the western part, have no outlets. The principal streams of the state are the Mississippi and its tributaries, direct or indirect,—the Crow Wing, Rum, Crow, St. Croix, Minnesota, Mankato, Elk, etc.; the St. Louis and the numerous other affluents of Lake Superior; the Red River, with its tributaries, in the NW.; the Rainy Lake River, with its Big and Little Forks, and other affluents. The larger streams of those just named, although but little used in navigation, are all navigable to a greater or less extent at high-water, except in winter; and the lake-chains and swift streams of the N. are the principal highways of that lonely region, being traversed by canoe, a conveyance which in winter is replaced by sledges drawn by dogs. Many of the streams have rapids and falls, affording abundant water-power, and the lakes and rivers abound in valuable fishes.

Climate.—The winter is severe and in the N. is intensely cold, with the mercury in many parts of the state not infrequently descending to —40°, but it is a matter of frequent remark that the dry and steady cold of Minnesota is much more endurable than the climate of a New England winter. The winters throughout most of the state are short and spring and autumn are long and pleasant seasons. The summer heat is high in the interior and western parts, a shade temperature of 100° and more being recorded. The rainfall is not very copious, but it is well distributed throughout the year and its waters are well husbanded in the numerous lakes of the state. The annual precipitation ranges from 20 inches in the NW. to 30 inches in the E. and SE. The state is subject to cyclonic visitations. The extreme SW. of the state is somewhat exposed to drought. The dry air and even temperature of Minnesota have given it a wide reputation as a sanitary resort for persons suffering from pulmonary complaints.

Geology and Minerals.—In the NE. and N. the prevalent formation is Archæan or Laurentian (or Huronian), but the strata are nearly everywhere deeply covered with drift, often heaped in long, low ridges, with sphagnous swamps of stunted tamarack between. Along Lake Superior this formation is flanked by a tract of Cambrian or pre-Cambrian age (here much broken and metamorphosed by dikes of igneous rock). This tract, together with the adjoining Silurian area, passes southward and is continuous with the regions of the same age of Wisconsin and Iowa. Among the valuable minerals are the iron-ores in the Lake Superior or northeastern country; peat, which is seemingly inexhaustible in some parts and which is somewhat utilized in places where other fuel is scarce; slate, on the river St. Louis and elsewhere; granite, gneiss, sandstone, magnesian limestone, and other rock suitable for building-material. The Sioux quartzite is a rough but exceedingly durable stone. The Indians formerly used the red pipestone in fashioning tobacco-pipes. Almost the whole of the state's soil is of glacial or drift origin. An interesting feature in the later geological history of the state was the Pleistocene Lake Agassiz, which occupied much of the region of the present valley of the Red River, and whose extinguishment gave to the state a large area of exceptionally fertile land. See AGASSIZ, LAKE. The great wealth of iron-ores developed in the Mesabi and Vermilion ranges, in the NE., has placed Minnesota in the front place among the iron-producing states of the Union. The shipments of ore from three of the state's ports in 1900 amounted to 9,419,179 tons. The ore-output from the Mesabi region in 1903 was 13,452,812 long tons, and from the Vermilion Range 1,918,584 tons, a total of 15,371,396 tons.

Vegetation.—Some idea has been given above of the great extent of the forests of Minnesota, but the southwestern and western parts of the state are in general but scantily wooded. Among the native fruits are crab-apples, cranberries, strawberries, service and buffalo berries, plums, and grapes. The Indians formerly subsisted to a large degree upon the seed of an interesting and abundant native cereal, the Zizania aquatica (or wild rice), the straw of which is now employed as a paper-stock.

Agricultural Resources.—The capacities of Minnesota as a wheat-producing state are prodigious. Spring wheat succeeds best here. The northwest, even as far as the Manitoba boundary-line, is a fine wheat country, and most parts of the state are very fruitful in corn. The leading agricultural crops in 1900 were: wheat, 51,509,252 bushels; oats, 41,907,046 bushels; corn, 31,794,708 bushels; barley, 7,275,251 bushels; rye, 1,036,444 bushels; potatoes, 8,636,058 bushels; and hay, 1,423,344 tons. Cattle, horses, swine, and wool are largely shipped to the seaboard, and pork-packing is an important industry. Hardy varieties of the apple are extensively cultivated. Wool-growing is an industry for which the southwestern portion of Minnesota is especially adapted. The quantity of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip of 1900 was about 2,700,000 pounds. Maple sugar is one of the important products of the state.

Manufactures.—The presence of practically unlimited water-power in a state abounding in dense forests of the most valuable timber trees and producing great quantities of grain and wool has insured the rapid growth of its manufacturing interests. St. Paul, Minneapolis, Stillwater, and other places are seats of active and varied industrial enterprises. The important industries of the state include the production of flour and other mill-products, lumber, wooden-ware, carriages, furniture, cooperage, foundry-products, boots, shoes, lime, bricks, saddlery, leather, woollens, malted liquors, linseed-oil, etc. The product of the flour- and grist-mills in 1900 was valued at $83,877,709. The second industry of importance is that of lumbering. In 1900 the quantity of lumber sawed in the state amounted to 1,308,902,000 feet. The valuation of the lumber and timber product was in 1900 $43,585,161. The manufacture of cheese, butter, and condensed milk is very extensive.

Situated at the head of navigation of the great Mississippi River system and at the extremity of the chain of great lakes, which, with the St. Lawrence River, constitutes a water highway to the Atlantic Ocean, Minnesota has a favored position for shipping her products to both home and foreign markets. An extensive network of railways also furnishes facilities for a more rapid method of transportation.

Railroads.—In 1862 the state had 10 miles of railroad; in 1863, 31 miles; in 1870, 1092 miles; in 1890, 5545 miles; and in 1900, 7023 miles.

Objects of Interest to Tourists.—Lake Pepin and other portions of the Mississippi are bordered by wild and inspiring scenery. The Falls of St. Anthony and of Minnehaha, the Dalles of the St. Louis and St. Croix rivers, and the great Indian pipestone-quarry, which was regarded as a common sanctuary by the Indians, are noted objects of interest. The northern forests and the remoter prairies afford deer, raccoons, bears, and much furred and feathered game, and the beautiful lakes and streams are the abode of trout, pike, pike-perch, and other valuable fishes.

Public Institutions.—The state university (University of Minnesota), located at Minneapolis, is one of the largest collegiate institutions in the country. It embraces, in addition to the regular academic department, colleges of engineering and the mechanic arts, of agriculture, medicine and surgery, and of law, and a school of mines. There are state normal schools at Mankato, Moorhead, St. Cloud, and Winona. Among the public institutions are a penitentiary at Stillwater, a reformatory at St. Cloud, and institutions for the deaf, dumb, and blind at Faribault.

The Counties number 82, as follows: Aitkin, Anoka, Becker, Beltrami, Benton, Bigstone, Blue Earth, Brown, Carlton, Carver, Cass, Chippewa, Chisago, Clay, Cook, Cottonwood, Crow Wing, Dakota, Dodge, Douglas, Faribault, Fillmore, Freeborn, Goodhue, Grant, Hennepin, Houston, Hubbard, Isanti, Itasca, Jackson, Kanabec, Kandiyohi, Kittson, Lac Qui Parle, Lake, Lesueur, Lincoln, Lyon, McLeod, Marshall, Martin, Meeker, Millelacs, Morrison, Mower, Murray, Nicollet, Nobles, Norman, Olmstead, Ottertail, Pine, Pipestone, Polk, Pope, Ramsey, Red Lake, Redwood, Renville, Rice, Rock, Roseau, St. Louis, Scott, Sherburne, Sibley, Stearns, Steele, Stevens, Swift, Todd, Traverse, Wabasha, Wadena, Waseca, Washington, Watonwan, Wilkin, Winona, Wright, and Yellow Medicine. The White Earth Indian Reservation is in this state.

The principal cities are Minneapolis (pop. in 1900, 202,718) and St. Paul, the capital (163,065), forming together the greatest centre in the world for the manufacture of flour; Duluth (52,969), with a fine harbor at the head of Lake Superior; Winona (19,714), Stillwater (12,318), Mankato (10,599), St. Cloud (8663), Faribault, Red Wing, Brainerd, Rochester, and Fergus Falls.

Constitution.—The governor and state officers are chosen for the term of two years. The legislature consists of a Senate and a House of Representatives. The members of the former are elected for four years and those of the latter for two years. The state has 9 representatives in the lower house of the federal Congress.

The population in 1850 was 6077; in 1860, 172,023; in 1870, 439,706; in 1880, 780,773; and in 1890, 1,301,826, showing a gain during the decade of 66.74 per cent. In 1900 the population was 1,751,394, of which number 505,318 were foreign-born. The people of Minnesota have very generally emigrated from the northern states, and of people of European birth the Swedes, Norwegians, and Germans predominate.

History.—That part of Minnesota E. of the Mississippi River belonged successively to the Northwest Territory and to the territories of Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. That part W. of the Mississippi was included in the Louisiana purchase from France and belonged in turn to the District of Louisiana and to the territories of Louisiana, Missouri, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota. Northern Minnesota was anciently the abode of the Chippewa Indians and the rest was possessed by bands of Sioux. Fort Snelling (St. Anthony) was established by the United States in 1819. Settlements were soon after made. In 1849 the territory of Minnesota was organized with nearly twice its present area. In 1858 the state was admitted to the Union; but the W. portion remained Minnesota Territory until 1861, when it was merged into the new territory of Dakota.

Minnesota City, a post-village of Winona co., Minn., on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul and other railroads, 6 miles NW. of Winona. Pop. in 1900, 242.

Minnesota Junction, a post-village of Dodge co., Wis., on the Chicago and Northwestern and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Rs., 18 miles N. of Watertown. Pop. about 125.

Minnesota Lake, a banking post-village of Faribault co., Minn., on a small lake and on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R., 30 miles S. by E. of Mankato. Pop. in 1900, 518.

Minnesota River (formerly called Saint Peter's) issues from Big Stone Lake, on the boundary between South Dakota and Big Stone co., Minn. It runs nearly southeastward to the town of Mankato, where it abruptly bends towards the north and northeast, and enters the Mississippi River about 7 miles above St. Paul and about the same distance below the centre of Minneapolis. Its length is estimated at 475 miles. Small steamboats ascend about 50 miles from its mouth during high-water. It traverses a fertile, undulating country, diversified with prairies and small lakes.

Min'neton'ka, a post-village of Hennepin co., Minn., about 2 miles E. of the lake of the same name, on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R., 10 miles WSW. of Minneapolis. Pop. about 130.

Minnetonka Beach, a post-village and resort of Hennepin co., Minn., on the Great Northern R. The banking point is Excelsior. Pop. in 1900, 101.

Minnetonka Lake, Minn., is in Hennepin co., about 10 miles WSW. of Minneapolis. It is about 15 miles long, diversified with fine scenery, and is an attractive summer-resort.

Minnewanka (or Devil's) Lake, in the Canadian National Park, about 4 miles from Banff. It is 11 miles in length and 300 feet in depth. Elevation, 4800 feet.

Minnewaska, min'nee-wȧs'kȧ, a popular summer-resort of Ulster co., N.Y., about 8 miles W. by S. of New Paltz, picturesquely situated on a lake of the same name. The elevation of the latter is 1800 feet above sea-level.

Minnewaukan, or Minnewaukon, a banking post-village, capital of Benson co., N.Dak., 56 miles N. of Carrington, on the Northern Pacific R. It is a supply point for an agricultural region. Pop. in 1900, 432.

Minnich, a post-village of Lehigh co., Pa. The banking point is Allentown. Pop. 90.

Minni Wakan, a name formerly applied to Devil's Lake, in North Dakota, in the NE. part of the state. Length, about 40 miles. The water is saline. Its surface is 1430 feet above the level of the sea.

Min'no'ra, a post-station of Calhoun co., W.Va.

Miño, a river of Spain. See MINHO.

Minoa, a post-village of Onondaga co., N.Y., on the New York Central and Hudson River R. The banking point is Syracuse. Pop. about 425.

Minocqua, a banking post-village of Vilas co., Wis., on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R., 36 miles NW. of Rhinelander. It is a summer-resort and has lumbering interests. Pop. about 500.

Minong, a post-village of Washburn co., Wis. Pop. 60.

Minonk, mi-nŭnk', a banking city of Woodford co., Ill., on the Illinois Central and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Rs., 29 miles N. of Bloomington. Coal is mined here, and there are various manufactures. Pop. in 1900, 2545.

Minook, a minor gold-stream of Alaska and southern tributary of the Yukon, discharges in about lon. 150° 10' W., at Rampart City.

Minooka, a banking post-village of Grundy co., Ill., on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific and the Elgin, Joliet and Eastern Rs., 10 miles WSW. of Joliet. It is a trade-centre. Pop. in 1900, 424.

Minooka, a post-village of Lackawanna co., Pa., on the Delaware and Hudson R., 3 miles SW. of Scranton. It has coaling-industries.

Minorca, min-or'kȧ (L. Balea'ris Mi'nor and Minor'ca; Sp. Menorca, mȧ-nor'kȧ; named from its being the "smaller" of the two principal islands of the group to which it belongs, in contradistinction to Majorca, the "larger"), one of the Balearic Islands, in the Mediterranean, belonging to Spain; between lat. 39° 47' and 40° 5' N. and between lon. 3° 48' and 4° 20' E.; length, 35 miles; average breadth, about 10 miles; area, 293 sq. m. The coast is very much indented on all sides except the S., and generally presents a succession of bold headlands enclosing small creeks and bays. Of these the best and most frequented is Port Mahon, on which is Mahon, or Port Mahon, the principal town of the island, a fortified place. The surface rises from all sides towards the centre, where it becomes mountainous, attaining, in El Toro, the height of about 1175 feet. The principal products are cereals, oil, wine, hemp, flax, oranges, and lemons. Iron, copper, and lead are found, and superior marble, porphyry, and alabaster exist in several districts. There are numerous limestone caverns. Many Celtic and other remains have been found on the island. Minorca, in common with the other islands of the Baleares, was anciently noted for its slingers, who distinguished themselves in the Carthaginian ranks of Hannibal. During the greater part of the eighteenth century it belonged to the British, who finally retroceded it to Spain at the peace of Amiens, in 1802. Pop. in 1897, 38,258.

Minori, me-no'ree, a small town of Italy, 7 miles WSW. of Salerno, near the Gulf of Salerno.

Minortown, a post-village of Litchfield co., Conn., about 8 miles WNW. of Waterbury.

Minot, mī'nŏt, a post-village of Androscoggin co., Me., in Minot township (town), about 38 miles N. of Portland. Pop. of the town in 1900, 808.

Minot, a banking city of North Dakota, the capital of Ward co., on the Mouse River and on the Great Northern and the Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie Rs., 206 miles W. of Grand Forks. Pop. in 1900, 1277. It is a shipping point for grain and coal.

Minotola, a post-village of Atlantic co., N.J., on the Central of New Jersey and the West Jersey and Seashore Rs. The banking point is Vineland. Pop. 175.

Minot's Ledge, or Cohasset Rocks, Massachusetts Bay, an extensive reef off Cohasset Bay, about 16 miles ESE. of Boston. It has a light-house, whose construction offered great engineering difficulties.

Minow (mee'now) Islands, a group of eastern Africa, in Mozambique Channel, off the NW. coast of Madagascar. Lat. (N. point) 12° 49' S.

Missisquoi (or Missisque) River, Vt., rises in Orleans co., runs northward into Canada, from which it passes into Franklin co., Vt., and enters a part of Lake Champlain called Missisquoi Bay. It is about 90 miles long.

Mississinewa River rises in Darke co., Ohio, runs westward through Randolph co., Ind., and enters the Wabash River about 3 miles above Peru. It is about 140 miles long.

Mississippi, mis'sis-sip'pee (Missi Sipi,—i.e., the "Great Water"), the largest and most important river of the United States, rises in the N. part of Minnesota, at an elevation of about 1600 feet above tide-water. Its chief source is Itasca Lake (lat. 47° 10′ N., lon. 95° 12′ W.), which is 1460 ft. above sea-level and about 2500 miles from the mouth of the river. It takes an initial circular course, expands into Lake Cass and other lakes, and below Crow Wing flows S. and SE. to St. Cloud and Minneapolis. At Minneapolis, 2160 miles from the mouth, the Falls of St. Anthony constitute the head of navigation for large vessels. The river here descends 66 ft. in less than 1 mile. It passes by the city of St. Paul, and a few miles lower strikes the boundary of Wisconsin and expands into the long and beautiful Lake Pepin, bordered by vertical limestone bluffs, which are about 400 ft. high and very picturesque. Below La Crosse its general direction is southward, and it forms the boundary between the states of Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, and Louisiana on the right, and Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Mississippi on the left. After an extremely sinuous course it enters the Gulf of Mexico by several mouths (passes) at the SE. extremity of Plaquemines parish, La., in lat. 29° N. and lon. 89° 12′ W.

Its largest affluents are the Missouri, Ohio, Arkansas, and Red rivers, besides which it receives the Minnesota, Iowa, Des Moines, and St. Francis from the right, and the St. Croix, Chippewa, Wisconsin, Illinois, Kaskaskia, Yazoo, and Big Black rivers from the left. The total length of the stream from the source of the Missouri to the Gulf of Mexico is computed to be 4200 miles, which exceeds that of any other river in the world. The area drained by this river and its tributaries is approximately 1,240,000 sq. m. It is computed that the mean volume of water discharged by it in a second is 670,000 cubic feet. It is navigable by large steamboats from its mouth to St. Paul, a distance of about 2150 miles. Steamboats can ascend the Missouri to Fort Benton, which is about 2300 miles from its mouth, or about 3500 miles from the Gulf of Mexico. The chief cities on the Mississippi, proceeding downward, are Minneapolis, St. Paul, La Crosse, Dubuque, Galena, Moline, Davenport, Rock Island, Burlington, Keokuk, Quincy, Hannibal, Alton, St. Louis, Cairo, Memphis, Helena, Vicksburg, Natchez, Baton Rouge, and New Orleans. The river is about 3500 ft. wide at St. Louis, 4000 ft. wide at the mouth of the Ohio, and about 2500 ft. at New Orleans. The mean velocity of the current between St. Louis and the Gulf of Mexico is about 65 miles per day. The Mississippi Valley comprises a vast extent of very fertile land, which is nearly level or gently undulating. As the river runs southward and traverses 18 degrees of latitude, the climate and productions of the lower part differ greatly from those of the upper part of the valley. The middle and upper courses of the river are bordered by bluffs 100–600 ft. in height, the margins of the prairie-lands that extend far into the interior. The valley between these bluffs frequently measures several miles in width. In Louisiana and Mississippi the river is bordered by alluvial plains and swamps which are lower than the surface of the water and are often inundated, though partly protected by artificial embankments called levees. The high level of flow is maintained as the result of the river's own sedimentation, the accumulation of silt in the stream's channel. In its lower course the Mississippi frequently shifts its bed here and there for a stretch of several miles as the soft bank on one side is worn away by the force of the current or the waters cut a passage through a peninsula formed by a loop in the river. The greatest floods occur in the spring after the snow and ice of the upper Mississippi have been melted. The water begins to rise about the 1st of March and increases until June. The levees are sometimes burst or overcome by the violence of the flood which rushes through crevasses and devastates large tracts of arable land of which cotton and sugar are the staple products. The greatest variations between extreme flood-water and the lowest stage have been noted at Cairo to be 53 ft. and at Vicksburg, 55 ft. At the mouth of the river a large delta has been formed by the mud and detritus carried down by the current. This delta is intersected by a number of outlets or water-courses, called bayous, which issue from the Mississippi or derive from it a supply of water in time of a flood. The area of this delta is about 12,300 sq. m., one-third of which is sea-marsh. The amount of silt or sediment carried to the Gulf of Mexico by this river is about 1–1500th the weight of the water, and the new soil deposited in an average year would cover an area of nearly 270 sq. m. with the thickness of one foot. The water enters the gulf by six channels, called the Northern Pass, the Southeast Pass, South Pass, etc. The navigation of these passes is partly obstructed by sand-banks, which are continually formed or shifted, and to obviate this difficulty a remarkable system of jetties (the Eads Jetties) has been constructed in the South Pass, by means of which a depth of water 30–34 feet has been maintained. The importance of the Mississippi River as a commercial highway has suffered greatly through railroad construction and has been steadily on the decline. The fleet of steam-packets has been reduced to a mere fraction of its former extent. The river is crossed by numerous bridges: at Memphis (elevation of river-surface, 190 feet), by the only bridge between St. Louis and New Orleans; St. Louis (elevation, 380–400 ft., depending upon the stage of the water), Hannibal (470 ft.), Quincy, Keokuk, Rock Island, Clinton, Dubuque (605 ft.), La Crosse (640 ft.), St. Paul (683–702 ft.), Minneapolis, etc. The Mississippi River was discovered by the Spaniard De Soto in 1541. In 1682 the Frenchman La Salle descended it to its mouth.

Mississippi, one of the Gulf States of the American Union, bounded N. by Tennessee, E. by Alabama, S. by the Gulf of Mexico and Louisiana, and W. by Arkansas and Louisiana, from which two states it is separated by the Mississippi River. In the extreme S. the state is separated from Louisiana by the Pearl River and for its northern limit it has the 35th degree of N. lat. Area of the land-surface, 46,340 sq. m.; of the appertaining waters, about 470 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—Along the Mississippi, above Vicksburg, a vast and partially swampy tract of timber and cultivated land extends northward beyond the state line and eastward beyond the Yazoo River and is protected from frequent overflows through the erection of strong levees. Several hundred miles of the Mississippi front in this state are thus protected. In the NE. there is an exceedingly fertile region, formerly prairie, bounded on the W. by the "flat woods," a densely wooded level tract. The northern and north-central portions are rolling and in most parts fertile. Eastward of the Yazoo there are high bluffs of river-drift (or loess), which approach the Mississippi at Vicksburg, Natchez, and other points. These bluffs (the "cane hills") are deeply broken with coulées and water-worn ravines and are often composed of most fertile soil. The great level pine region (or "cow-country") of Mississippi, which at one time covered the greater part of the southern third of the state, affords much natural pasturage and large amounts of timber and naval stores. No elevation in the state can be dignified with the name of mountain and the highest point of land does not appear to exceed greatly 900 feet. Apart from the Mississippi, the more important rivers of the state are the Yazoo, Big Black, Pearl, Tombigbee (upper course), and Pascagoula (formed by the Leaf and the Chickasawha).

Geology.—In the NE. the Alabama coal-measures occupy a small area of this state, but are represented only by their lower or unproductive strata, and Mississippi has no true coal, although deposits of good lignite (of Tertiary and Cretaceous age) are not wanting. The northeastern plains are Cretaceous and are very fertile. The most widely prevailing formation is the Tertiary; the lowlands along the Mississippi and the gulf are of Post-Tertiary and alluvial character, and, indeed, the greater part of the state lies within the ancient embayment-area of the Mississippi River. The orange or tinted Quaternary sands with their curious conical knolls are a striking physiographic feature. Lime, rough sandstone, fictile clays, phosphatic rock, etc., are obtained, but no ores of any consequence are mined in the state.

Vegetation.—The marshy regions abound in cypress, bay, black gum, and other timber trees. The pine forests have already been alluded to. In the hilly country there are still valuable woodlands of oak, hickory, locust, walnut, bilsted, etc. The native fruits include the persimmon, papaw, Chickasaw plum, Ogeechee lime, and excellent grapes. The Tillandsia (or Spanish moss) affords a fibre much used by upholsterers and the abundant cane (Arundinaria) yields a useful paper-stock.

Climate.—The greater part of the state lies in the subtropical belt and has thus a climate marked by high summer and annual temperatures and by mild winters. The average January temperature in the extreme S. is about 50° and in the northern sections, 40°. A minimum temperature of 15° (or, exceptionally, even 10°) has been noted. The average annual rainfall is somewhat over 50 inches.

Agriculture.—The NE. Cretaceous districts and the low Mississippi bottom-lands are of almost inexhaustible fertility and support a large agricultural population. Throughout the pine region there are fertile tracts of cotton land. Southward there is considerable rice and sugar-cane culture. Cotton and Indian corn are the staple products. The chief agricultural crops were for the year 1900: corn, 25,231,998 bushels; oats, 2,390,052 bushels; wheat, 40,781 bushels; potatoes, 347,094 bushels; and hay, 99,922 tons. The commercial crop of cotton was 1,203,739 bales, the state ranking third among the cotton-producing states of the Union. The total area given over to the cultivation of cotton was estimated to be 2,896,000 acres. Grazing is a fairly important industry, the small cattle finding abundant pasturage in the wide forests. Much pork is produced and the annual wool-clip is considerable. Honey, wax, butter, sweet potatoes, sorghum, pulse, tobacco, etc., are products of minor importance. The climate is well adapted for sericulture and vine-growing. The orange flourishes in the south, the pomegranate and fig grow in most parts without protection, and the peach is found in a half-wild state.

Manufactures.—The most extensive manufacturing interest is the cutting and sawing of lumber. The chief seats of this occupation are the lower valleys of the Pascagoula and Pearl rivers and the products are shipped both by rail and by water. The shipments of yellow pine lumber during eleven months of 1900 amounted to 251,092,163 feet, while the cutting during the same period was 256,343,802 feet. The total value of the lumber and timber products was, in 1900, $15,656,110. The manufacture of cotton-seed oil and oil-cake (valued in 1900 at $6,681,121) and of naval stores has acquired some importance. Other manufactures are chiefly local.

Commerce.—The river-towns and the railroad centres do a large forwarding and distributing business. The sheltered sound, with its diverging bays and lagoons, affords safe and tranquil passage for coasting-vessels, although the state has no harbor with sufficient water for large shipping. Besides the Mississippi, steam navigation ascends the Yazoo, Tallahatchee, Yalobusha, Pascagoula, and Tombigbee rivers, and is to some extent practicable upon the Big Black, Sunflower, and Pearl rivers.

Railroads.—In 1846 there were 42 miles of railroad; in 1850, 75 miles; in 1860, 862 miles; in 1870, 990 miles; in 1880, 1127 miles; in 1890, 2470 miles; and in 1900, 2952 miles.

The Counties number 75, as follows: Adams, Alcorn, Amite, Attala, Benton, Bolivar, Calhoun, Carroll, Chickasaw, Choctaw, Claiborne, Clarke, Clay, Coahoma, Copiah, Covington, De Soto, Franklin, Greene, Grenada, Hancock, Harrison, Hinds, Holmes, Issaquena, Itawamba, Jackson, Jasper, Jefferson, Jones, Kemper, Lafayette, Lauderdale, Lawrence, Leake, Lee, Leflore, Lincoln, Lowndes, Madison, Marion, Marshall, Monroe, Montgomery, Neshoba, Newton, Noxubee, Oktibbeha, Panola, Pearl River, Perry, Pike, Pontotoc, Prentiss, Quitman, Rankin, Scott, Sharkey, Simpson, Smith, Sunflower, Tallahatchee, Tate, Tippah, Tishomingo, Tunica, Union, Warren, Washington, Wayne, Webster, Wilkinson, Winston, Yalobusha, and Yazoo.

Principal Towns.—These are Vicksburg (pop. in 1900, 14,834), Meridian (14,050), Natchez (12,210), Jackson, the capital (7816), Greenville (7642), Columbus (6484), Biloxi (5467), Yazoo City, McComb, and Aberdeen.

Government.—The governor and principal executive officers are chosen for a term of 4 years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives, the members of both bodies being elected for 4 years. The state has 8 representatives in the lower house of Congress.

Education.—There are normal schools and colleges at Holly Springs, Louisville, Troy, Walthall, Walnut Grove, and elsewhere. Oxford is the seat of the state university, and the state agricultural and mechanical college is situated at Agricultural College. Tougaloo University, with normal, industrial, model, intermediate, and primary departments, instructs colored students. Other collegiate institutions are the Mississippi College, at Clinton; the North Mississippi Presbyterian Female College and Holly Springs Normal Institute, at Holly Springs; Millsaps College, at Jackson; Whitworth Female College, at Brookhaven; and the Alcorn Agricultural and Mechanical College (for col- d), at Westside.

pulation in 1800, 8850; in 1810, 40,352; in 1820, 8; in 1830, 136,621; in 1840, 375,651; in 1850, 48; in 1860, 791,305, of whom 436,631 were slaves; 870, 827,922; in 1880, 1,131,587; in 1890, 1,289,600; in , 1,551,270. The negro population in 1900 numbered 530. In some sections the negroes are many times more erous than the whites. The foreign-born population in was only 7981.

History.—De Soto in 1539 entered the northern part of t is now the state of Mississippi. In 1682 the French explorer La Salle descended the Mississippi River to its mouth. He took possession of the region on both sides of the river for Louis XIV. and the name of Louisiana was given to it. In 1699 Iberville estalished a colony not far from the present site of Biloxi. This was soon abandoned, but in 1712 a permanent settlement was made where Biloxi now stands. Natchez (originally Rosalie) was founded in 1716. In 1763 the region included within the present state, part of which had belonged to Spain, passed to the English. In 1783 most of it became a possession of the United States, part again becoming Spanish (included in West Florida). Mississippi Territory was organized in 1798 and then included a wide strip whose N. line ran westward from the Chattahoochee to the Mississippi at the mouth of the Yazoo, no part touching the Gulf. In 1804 Congress annexed to Mississippi a great tract embracing three-fifths of the present area of Mississippi and Alabama, a region which had formerly belonged to Georgia and South Carolina. In 1813 the United States Congress added the Gulf counties taken from Spain to Mississippi, but Spain did not cede them until the purchase of Florida by the United States in 1819. The state was admitted to the Union in 1817 with its present limits. From 1861 to 1865 Mississippi was one of the Confederate states. Reconstruction was completed in 1870.

Mississippi, a northeastern county of Arkansas, borders on Missouri. Area, 842 sq. m. It is bounded on the SE. by the Mississippi River and is intersected by the Little River and partly bounded on the W. by the St. Francis River. Numerous lakes are found in this county, the largest being Big Lake. Capital, Osceola. Pop. in 1890, 11,635; in 1900, 16,384.

Mississippi, a southeastern county of Missouri, has an area of 417 sq. m. It is bounded on the N. and E. by the Mississippi River, which separates it from Kentucky. Capital, Charleston. Pop. in 1890, 10,134; in 1900, 11,837.

Mississippi City, a post-village, capital of Harrison co., Mississippi, is on the Gulf of Mexico (Mississippi Sound) and on the Louisville and Nashville R., 71 miles E. by N. of New Orleans. Pop. in 1900, 534.

Mississippi River, a river of Ontario, rises in Mississippi Lake, Lanark co., and, flowing northerly 100 miles, enters the Ottawa 7 miles above Arnprior. A good part is navigable for small steamers.

Missivri, a town of Eastern Rumelia. See Mesembria.

Missolonghi, mis-so-long'ghee, written also Mesolonghi, a town of Greece, capital of the nomarchy of Acarnania and Ætolia, situated on a lagoon which forms part of the Gulf of Patras, about 10 miles E. of the Aspro-Potamo (Achelous), at the base of the Ætolian mountains, 22 miles W. of Lepanto. It is an unpretentious place, but carries on considerable trade, although the lagoon is too shallow to permit large vessels to approach the town. It is the seat of an archbishop. Missolonghi was the great stronghold of the Greeks in Western Hellas in the war of liberation, heroically withstanding the Turks until 1826, when it fell. Byron closed his career here in 1824. His heart is kept in a mausoleum and a statue of the poet and Philhellene adorns the town. Just outside of the place is the tomb of Marco Botzaris, who fell in a sortie from the fortress in 1823. Pop. in 1896, 8394.

Missoula, miz-zoo'la, a northwestern county of Montana, borders on Idaho. Area, 6385 sq. m. It is intersected by Clarke's River, a branch of the Columbia. The surface is mostly mountainous and is extensively covered with forests of pine and other evergreen trees. The Bitter Root Mountains extend along the SW. border of this county. Gold, silver, and copper are found. Capital, Missoula. Pop. in 1890, 3426; in 1900, 13,964.

Missoula, a banking city, the capital of Missoula co., Mont., is on a river of the same name, near the confluence of the Bitter Root and Hell Gate rivers and on the Northern Pacific R., 96 miles (direct) WNW. of Helena. It is in a fertile valley near the Rocky Mountains, in a mining, agricultural, and fruit-growing region, and is the seat of the University of Montana. The city has bottling-works, a brewery, etc. Pop. in 1900, 4366.

Missoula River, Mont. See Bitter Root River.

Missouri, miz-oo'ree (i.e., the "Mud River"), a great river of the United States, is formed by the confluence of the Jefferson, Gallatin, and Madison rivers or forks, which rise in the Rocky Mountains and unite at Gallatin City, Mont. This point (lat. 45° 56′ N., lon. 111° 34′ W.) is 4032 feet above the level of the sea. The source of the Madison Fork is 8300 feet above sea-level and about 2 miles from one of the head-streams of the Snake River. From Gallatin City the river runs nearly northward through a mountainous region and in a valley 20 to 25 miles in width. About 16 miles E. of Helena it passes through a deep and narrow cañon or gorge 5 miles long, called the "Gates of the Rocky Mountains." The scenery here is very sublime and imposing. About 350 miles from the junction of the three Forks at Great Falls city (elevation, 3200 feet) are the Great Falls, where the river descends 400 feet in about 15 miles by a series of cataracts, the highest of which presents a perpendicular fall of nearly 90 feet. At this point the river is narrowed from upward of a half-mile to 300 yards. Forty miles below the Great Falls is Fort Benton, the head of steamboat navigation. From this place the Missouri runs eastward through Choteau and Dawson cos., Mont., and pursues the same general direction for 500 miles or more beyond.

Near Fort Buford it crosses the eastern boundary of Montana and enters North Dakota in lat. 48° N. Here it is joined by its largest affluent, the Yellowstone, which is about 800 yards wide at its mouth. After reaching the meridian of 102° 30′ W. lon. the Missouri runs southeastward to Bismarck, below which it flows nearly southward for several hundred miles, and through the midde of South Dakota, and traverses vast prairies or grassy plains almost destitute of forest trees. After it has passed the mouth of the Cheyenne (a large affluent which comes from the W.) it changes its course to the SE., forms the NE. boundary of Nebraska, and strikes the boundary-line of Iowa near Sioux City. From this place it flows nearly southward, forming the boundary between Iowa and Nebraska. Pursuing next a SSE. direction, it forms part of the boundary-line between Kansas and the state of Missouri until it reaches Kansas City, where it receives another large affluent, the Kansas River. From this point the general direction is eastward across the state of Missouri. It enters the Mississippi River 3 miles below Alton, Ill., and 20 miles above St. Louis. It is a turbid stream, noted for the rapidity of its current, which encroaches on the land and often carries away its banks. It is, including the Jefferson, nearly 3000 miles long and exceeds in length as well as in volume the part of the Mississippi above their junction.

The area drained by the Missouri is probably in the neighborhood of 800,000 sq. m. and the average quantity of water discharged by it in a second is said to be 120,000 cubic feet. During high-water steamboats can ascend it to Fort Benton, which is about 2300 miles from its mouth. Fort Buford is the head of navigation during low-water, which is in summer and early autumn.

The chief towns on its banks are (in descending order) Great Falls, Fort Benton, Bismarck, Pierre, Yankton, Sioux City, Musselshell, Milk, Little Missouri, Omaha, Council Bluffs, Nebraska City, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth, Kansas City (Kan.), Kansas City (Mo.), and Jefferson City. The largest affluents of the Missouri besides those already mentioned are the Niobrara, Platte, Big Cheyenne, Dakota (or James), Grand, and Osage.

Missouri, a north-central state of the American Union, bordered on the E. by the Mississippi River and traversed by the great stream whose name it bears. On the N. it is bounded by Iowa, on the E. by Illinois, Kentucky, and Tennessee, on the S. by Arkansas, and on the W. by Nebraska, Kansas, and Indian Territory. Its southeastern-most counties form a projection which is bounded westward by Arkansas. The main southern boundary-line is the parallel of 36° 30′ N. lat. and the northern limit is the parallel of 40° 30′. Area of the land-surface, 68,735 sq. m.; of the appertaining waters, about 680 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—N. of the Missouri River the surface is a very level or more frequently rolling region, diversified by timber and open prairie land. S. of that river there are three well-characterized regions: the open and comparatively treeless plains of the W., continuous with those of Kansas; the Ozark Mountains (Hills), a rough but not greatly elevated country, well timbered, and continuous southward with the mountains of Arkansas; and the southeastern marshy tract of exceedingly fertile and well-timbered country, which sank to nearly its present level during the earthquakes of 1811–12. From Cape Girardeau southward the Mississippi front is diked or leveed. The highest elevation of the state appears to be less than 2000 feet (Cedargap, Wright co., 1692 feet). Iron Mountain and Pilot Knob are respectively 1077 and 1013 feet in elevation.

Rivers.—By means of its two great rivers and their navigable branches, Missouri has direct water-communication with almost every state in the Mississippi Valley, and of its own minor streams the Osage, Grand, Maramec, Salt, Gasconade, White, St. Francis, and Current, and others have, or have had, some utility as navigable streams; but the great extension of railroads has impaired their usefulness in this respect.

Geology, Mineral Wealth.—The two prominent features of Missouri geology are (1) the great Cambro-Silurian Ozark region, whose highly metalliferous strata are much broken by dikes and outcrops of Azoic rocks, and (2) the coal-field of the N. and centre, continuous northward and westward with the coal-measures of Iowa and Kansas. The SE. section of the state lies in the alluvial tract of the Mississippi River. The metalliferous ores of Missouri are very rich and abundant. Prominent illustrations of their value are afforded by the Pilot Knob, Iron Mountain, Shepherd Mountain, and other mountain-like masses of excellent hematitic and magnetic ores; the Mine La Motte, with its rich ores of lead and nickel; the lead- and zinc-mines of Galena and Joplin; and the Vallé and Perry lead-mines of St. François co. Missouri has for upward of 150 years produced a great amount of lead, and in some years the product exceeded 50,000,000 pounds. Millions of tons of iron-ore have been mined in years of active iron-trade, but the product from the once seemingly exhaustless deposits of Iron and Pilot mountains has of late years been so far diminished as the result of competition with more favored mining centres as to be almost insignificant. The production of zinc holds a leading place in the mining economy of the state and in 1903 the production of spelter was 9994 short tons. The Mine Lamotte deposits furnish the main supply of nickel and cobalt production in the United States. Coal-mining carried on in 36 counties yielded in 1903, 4,238,586 short tons. Most of the Missouri coals are either cannelite or bituminous. Besides lead-, zinc-, iron- and nickel-ores good copper-ores are abundant; cadmium exists in considerable quantities; some gold and silver have been obtained; while marble, limestone, glass-sand, kaolin, fire-clay, barium sulphate, and other useful mineral substances exist plentifully.

Climate.—The position of the state in the far interior of the national domain gives to it a climate of marked continental type, with accentuated summer temperatures and locally rigorous winters. At St. Louis, where the summer heat at times reaches 105°–110°, the winter cold falls to —10° and even —20°. The state lies in the path of cyclonic storms. The mean annual rainfall ranges from 35 to 60 inches.

Agriculture.—Missouri affords every variety of soil, from the fruitful corn lands of the Mississippi bottom, the wide rolling prairies of the N., and the inexhaustibly productive loess of the NW., to the rocky and inarable hill-sides seen in parts of the S. and the cold and refractory black clays occurring upon some belts of the coal-field. Corn is the great staple of Missouri, but winter wheat, barley, hay, oats, hemp, tobacco, fruit, sweet and true potatoes, market and dairy products, wool, wine, beef, and pork are all produced in large excess over home demands. Sorghum and castor-oil beans are important crops and cotton is grown in the S. The leading agricultural crops in 1900 were: corn, 180,710,404 bushels; wheat, 18,846,713 bushels; oats, 24,695,373 bushels; potatoes, 10,106,961 bushels; and hay, 2,768,015 tons. The commercial crop of cotton was in the same year, 17,275 bales. Grazing and stock-breeding are a leading farm interest and great numbers of cattle, horses, mules, etc., are forwarded hence to eastern and foreign markets. The official returns give Missouri a very respectable rank as regards the value of its lumber and forest products, yet it is largely supplied with lumber from the upper Lake States. The cuttings of yellow pine amounted during eleven months of the year 1900 to 146,108,250 feet.

Manufactures.—Missouri, as the leading manufacturing state W. of the Mississippi River, has large and varied industries, comprising the making of agricultural implements, boots and shoes, bricks, bridges, cars, carriages, drain-tile, flour, castings, chemicals, leather, lumber, cooperage, machinery, musical instruments, castor oil, lard oil, oleomargarine, paints, tobacco, snuff, spirits, wine, cigars, woollens, candles, soap, etc. The number of cigar and tobacco factories exceeds 600, while the annual product is over 70,000,000 cigars, a somewhat larger quantity of cigarettes, and nearly 70,000,000 pounds of cut and smoking tobacco. The tobacco-industry ranks second in importance in the state. In 1900 there were in the state 83 fruit and grain distilleries, the product of which in fermented liquors was 2,461,252 barrels. In the brewing of malted liquors the state holds an important position. The product of oleomargarine in 1900 was 4,107,696 pounds. Slaughtering and pork-packing are the most important interest of the state, the valuation of the product from this source in 1900 having been $43,040,885. The hogs packed and marketed in St. Louis and Kansas City in the year ending March 1, 1900, numbered 5,476,411.

Railroads.—In 1852, when the first railroad of Missouri was opened, there were 38 miles of track; in 1855, 139 miles; in 1860, 817 miles; in 1870, 2000 miles; in 1890, 6142 miles; and in 1900, 6962 miles. Several iron railroad bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers and the roads connect with all important points in the W., S., and SW., as well as eastward. The steam navigation of the rivers is now quite subsidiary to the railroad business.

Education.—There are state normal schools at Kirksville, Warrensburg, and Cape Girardeau, a training-school (Lincoln Institute) for colored teachers at Jefferson City, and a state university at Columbia, to which is affiliated a normal college, and a school of mines at Rolla. There are two universities at St. Louis—Washington University (non-sectarian) and Saint Louis University (Roman Catholic)—and one at Canton, besides colleges at Cape Girardeau, Fayette, Fulton, Glasgow, Palmyra, Independence, Kidder, Liberty, St. Joseph, St. Louis, and Springfield, some of them well endowed and embracing professional and other departments of instruction. There are several law, medical, and theological schools.

Counties, Cities, Government.—The counties, including St. Louis city, which was made independent in 1875, are 115 in number,—viz., Adair, Andrew, Atchison, Audrain, Barry, Barton, Bates, Benton, Bollinger, Boone, Buchanan, Butler, Caldwell, Callaway, Camden, Cape Girardeau, Carroll, Carter, Cass, Cedar, Chariton, Christian, Clark, Clay, Clinton, Cole, Cooper, Crawford, Dade, Dallas, Daviess, Dekalb, Dent, Douglas, Dunklin, Franklin, Gasconade, Gentry, Greene, Grundy, Harrison, Henry, Hickory, Holt, Howard, Howell, Iron, Jackson, Jasper, Jefferson, Johnson, Knox, Laclede, Lafayette, Lawrence, Lewis, Lincoln, Linn, Livingston, McDonald, Macon, Madison, Maries, Marion, Mercer, Miller, Mississippi, Moniteau, Monroe, Montgomery, Morgan, New Madrid, Newton, Nodaway, Oregon, Osage, Ozark, Pemiscot, Perry, Pettis, Phelps, Pike, Platte, Polk, Pulaski, Putnam, Ralls, Randolph, Ray, Reynolds, Ripley, St. Charles, St. Clair, St. François, St. Genevieve, St. Louis, St. Louis city, Saline, Schuyler, Scotland, Scott, Shannon, Shelby, Stoddard, Stone, Sullivan, Taney, Texas, Vernon, Warren, Washington, Wayne, Webster, Worth, and Wright.

The principal cities are St. Louis, the metropolis, on the Mississippi River (pop. in 1900, 575,238), Kansas City (163,752), St. Joseph (102,979), Joplin (26,023), Springfield (23,267), Sedalia (15,231), Hannibal (12,780), Jefferson City, the capital (9664), Carthage (9416), Moberly (8012), Nevada (7461), Chillicothe (6905), and Independence (6974).

The governor and state officers serve for a term of 4 years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives, the members of the former being elected for 4 years and those of the latter for 2 years. The state sends 16 representatives to the national Congress.

Population.—The original white stock of Missouri was principally of French origin, and the early English-speaking immigrants were principally from the northern tier of slave states. There is at present a large and thrifty German element in the population. Many thousands of people of the old Missouri stock migrated long since to the Pacific coast, and California and Nevada, and especially Oregon, were very largely peopled by them. Pop. in 1810, 20,485; in 1820, 66,586; in 1830, 140,145; in 1840, 383,702; in 1850, 682,044; in 1860, 1,182,012; in 1870, 1,721,295; in 1880, 2,168,380; in 1890, 2,679,184; in 1900, 3,106,665. The negro population in 1900 numbered 161,234; the foreign-born, 216,379.

History.—The territory included in the present state of Missouri formed part of the French colony of Louisiana. Little was attempted in the way of settlement before the transfer of Louisiana to Spain in 1763. St. Louis was founded in 1764. The region came into the possession of the United States in 1803, having been purchased as part of the Louisiana province from France, to whom the province had been retroceded by Spain. It formed a part of Louisiana Territory until 1812, when it took the name of Missouri. The state of Missouri was admitted to the Union in 1821, after a protracted and exciting political struggle, growing out of the question of the extension of slavery, which ended in the "Missouri Compromise" of 1820, by which the new state was permitted to retain slavery. That part of the former territory which was not made a portion of the state retained the name of Missouri Territory until 1854. It extended northward to British America and westward to the Rocky Mountains. The state did not receive its exact present limits until 1835. Missouri early monopolized the once-lucrative Santa Fé trade and became also the head-quarters of the hunters and trappers of the Far West. In the Kansas troubles which broke out in 1855 the citizens of the western border took an active part against the free-state movement. At the outbreak of the Civil War in 1861 the people of Missouri were divided with regard to secession, but the Unionists finally prevailed. The state was the theatre of several active campaigns. A World's Fair was held in St. Louis in 1904 in commemoration of the Louisiana Purchase.

Missouri City, a banking post-town of Clay co., Mo., on the N. bank of the Missouri River and on the Wabash R., 21 miles ENE. of Kansas City. Pop. in 1900, 398.

Missouri Valley, a banking city of Harrison co., Iowa, on the Chicago and Northwestern R., 21 miles N. of Council Bluffs. It has stock-yards, railroad machine-shops, etc. Pop. in 1900, 4010.

Mist, a post-village of Columbia co., Oregon. The banking point is Portland. Pop. 100.

Mistassa, a river of Quebec, falls into Lake St. John. It is navigable for large boats for many miles and farther up for bark canoes.

Mistassini, mis-tas-see'ne, a lake of Canada, close to the height of land which divides the waters of the Saguenay from those flowing into Hudson Bay, in lat. 51° N., lon. 72° to 73° W. This lake forms the head-waters of Rupert River, flowing into James Bay. The lake is about 100 miles long and from 12 to 15 miles wide. Elevation, 1350 feet.

Mistassini ("The Large Rock") River, a river of Quebec, is formed by the junction of the Washieamiscou and the Kakissagan, and runs into the NW. side of Lake St. John, about 3 miles from the river Ashuapmouchouan. It is about 3 miles wide at its mouth, including a group of islets, but is extremely shallow. It is also called the Rivière de Sable (or Sand River).

Mistek, mis'tĕk, a town of Moravia, 50 miles ENE. of Olmütz. Pop. (commune) in 1900, 5804.

Mistelbach, mis'tęl-bȧĸ\, a town of Lower Austria, 27 miles NNE. of Vienna. It has an old fortified church, a Barnabite abbey, and a hospital. Pop. in 1900, 4105.

Misterbianco, mis-tĕr-be-ȧn'ko, a commune of Sicily, 4 miles NW. of Catania.

Misti, mis-tee', a volcanic mountain of Peru, also known as the volcano of Arequipa, a few miles NE. of Arequipa. Height, about 19,200 feet. Near its summit was established the loftiest meteorological observatory in the world (station now discontinued). The name Misti is also less correctly given to the volcano of Huayna Putina, SE. of Arequipa.

Mistir, a town of Tunis. See Monastir.

Mistra, or Misthra, a decayed town of Greece, in the Morea, about 3 miles from Sparta. Above it, on a spur of Mount Taygetus, tower the ruins of the mediæval stronghold of Misthra.

Mistretta, mis-trĕt'tȧ (anc. Amastra, Amestratus, and Mytistratum), a town of Sicily, 68 miles WSW. of Messina, on the Regitano. Pop. (commune) in 1901, 13,481.

Mitau, mee'tŏw (L. Mittavia; Lettish, Jelgava, yĕl-gȧ'vȧ), a town of Russia, capital of Courland, in a fruitful plain, on the Aa, 25 miles SW. of Riga and 350 miles SW. of St. Petersburg. It has broad streets lined with low houses. The principal architectural features of the town are the splendid palace built by Biron, duke of Courland, now used as a government building, and the provincial museum. One of the two gymnasia has a library of about 45,000 volumes. The town has a valuable collection of archives. Mitau is the seat of the Courland Society of Literature and Art. The industries are not on a large scale. Pop. in 1897, 35,011.

Mitcham, a suburb of London, in Surrey, about midway between Wimbledon and Croydon. It has extensive flower-gardens, whose product is used in the manufacture of perfumes and essences.

Mitcham, a suburb of Adelaide, South Australia. Pop. about 2000.

Mitchell, a county in the SW. part of Georgia, has an area of 542 sq. m. It is bounded on the NW. by the Flint River. Capital, Camilla. Pop. in 1890, 10,906; in 1900, 14,767.

Mitchell, a county in the N. part of Iowa, borders on Minnesota. Area, 480 sq. m. It is intersected by the Cedar River and is also drained by the Little Cedar River and the West Branch of the Wapsipinicon. Capital, Osage. Pop. in 1890, 13,299; in 1900, 14,916.

Mitchell, a county in the N. part of Kansas, has an area of 715 sq. m. It is intersected by the Solomon River, the North and South Forks of which unite in the NW. part of this county. It is also drained by Limestone and Salt creeks. Capital, Beloit. Pop. in 1890, 15,037; in 1900, 14,647.

Mitchell, a county in the W. part of North Carolina, borders on Tennessee. Area, 362 sq. m. It is drained by the Nolachucky River and bounded on the SE. by the Blue Ridge. Iron-ore, mica, and asbestos are abundant. Capital, Bakersville. Pop. in 1890, 12,807; in 1900, 15,221.

Mitchell, a county in the NW. part of Texas. Area, 807 sq. m. It is traversed from N. to S. by the Colorado River. Salt is found here. Capital, Colorado. Pop. in 1890, 2059; in 1900, 2855.

Mitchell, a post-village of Glascock co., Ga., on the Southern R., 21 miles NE. of Sandersville, its banking point. Pop. about 250.

Mitchell, a banking post-town of Lawrence co., Ind., on the Chicago, Indianapolis and Louisville and the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern Rs., 61 miles NW. of New Albany. It has flouring-, planing- and saw-mills, lime-kilns, etc. Pop. in 1900, 1772.

Mitchell, a banking post-town of Mitchell co., Iowa, on the Red Cedar River and on the Illinois Central R., 5 miles NW. of Osage. Pop. in 1900, 245.

Mitchell, a post-village of Rice co., Kan. Pop. 60.

Mitchell, a post-station of Antrim co., Mich.

Mitchell, a post-town of Wheeler co., Oregon, 54 miles NE. of Pineville. Pop. in 1900, 135.

Mitchell, a banking city, capital of Davison co., S.Dak., 70 miles NW. of Yankton, on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul and the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Rs. It is the seat of the Dakota University (Methodist Episcopal) and has railroad repair-shops, machine-shop, grain-elevators, brick-yard, etc. Pop. in 1900, 4055.

Pop. in 1870, 49,311; in 1880, 48,653; in 1890, 51,587; in 1900, 62,740.

Mobile, a city, port of entry, and capital of Mobile co., Ala., is situated on the W. bank of the Mobile River, at its entrance into the bay of the same name, 30 miles N. of the Gulf of Mexico and 140 miles ENE. of New Orleans. Lat. 30° 42′ N.; lon. 88° W. It is the leading city of the state in commerce and occupies an important position in the cotton-market of the United States. The site is a level sandy plain, sufficiently elevated for convenient drainage, being about 15 feet higher than the bay. The city is not compactly built, except the portion occupied by the commercial houses, and the shaded streets of magnolia and live-oak, together with the numerous gardens, give it a pleasingly restful appearance. On the S. and W. sides of the city are dry, sandy pine hills, which afford agreeable retreats during the hot season. The most prominent buildings are the Federal building, cotton exchange, court-house, marine hospital, Southern Market, Odd Fellows' and Temperance Halls, and the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception. Among the city's educational institutions are Barton Academy, the Medical College of Alabama, Academy of the Visitation, and St. Mary's School.

Mobile has an advantageous position for trade, being the natural outlet of one of the greatest cotton regions in the United States. Steamboats ply between this port and Montgomery on the Alabama River and Tuscaloosa on the Black Warrior. During winter and spring they ascend as high as Columbus on the Tombigbee River. Other steamers run to New Orleans via lakes Borgne and Pontchartrain. The city is on the direct route from the Gulf of Mexico to the great lakes and is approached by the Louisville and Nashville, the Mobile and Ohio, and other railroads. The harbor has been greatly improved and now admits vessels drawing 23 feet of water. From 250,000 to 300,000 bales of cotton pass through the port of Mobile annually, and there are also exported large quantities of lumber, staves, shingles, and naval stores. The export trade of the city is largely with the South American states, Cuba, and the British West Indies. The industrial establishments are represented by numerous cotton- and cotton-seed oil mills, foundries, flouring-, lumber-, sash- and blind-factories, and manufactories of ships and boats, cordage, tobacco and cigars, beer, cedar pencils, etc.

Mobile was founded by the French about 1710 (their settlement farther N. on the Mobile River having been removed hither). For a number of years it was the capital of their incipient colony of Louisiana. From 1763 to 1780 it belonged to England and then to Spain until 1813. In the latter year the forces of the United States took possession of it, but the place almost immediately fell into the hands of the English, who relinquished it to the United States in the Treaty of Ghent, Dec., 1814. It was incorporated as a town in 1814 and a city charter was granted in 1819. In the Civil War the city held out against the Federals until April, 1865. (See Mobile Bay). Pop. in 1860, 29,258; in 1870, 32,034; in 1880, 29,132; in 1890, 31,076; in 1900, 38,469, of which about 13,000 were colored.

Mobile Bay, in the SW. part of Alabama, extends from the Gulf of Mexico northward about 36 miles to the mouth of the Mobile River. The width varies from 8 miles to 18, the widest part being nearest the Gulf. The main channel, by which vessels enter the bay, is between Dauphin Island on the W., at the E. extremity of which is Fort Gaines, and Mobile Point on the E., on which is Fort Morgan, an important fortress. Farragut won a victory in Mobile Bay on Aug. 5, 1864.

Mogul (mo-gŭl', a corruption of Mongol) Empire, the name commonly applied to the empire founded in Hindustan, in the early part of the sixteenth century, by Baber, a descendant of Timur, or Tamerlane. That conqueror, after establishing his sway in Afghanistan, defeated Ibrahim Lodi, the Mohammedan emperor of Delhi, in 1526 and became master of northern India. His successors extended their dominions until they finally ruled over nearly the whole of the Indian peninsula. The seat of the Great Mogul, as the ruler came to be known, was long at Agra and later in Delhi. Among the most distinguished rulers of this dynasty, to whom are due some of the most magnificent monuments of Oriental architecture, were Akbar, Jehangir, Shah Jehan, and Aurungzebe. From the death of Aurungzebe in 1707 may be dated the decline of the Mogul Empire, which was extinguished by the British at the beginning of the nineteenth century. In 1857, at the outbreak of the Sepoy Mutiny, a futile attempt was made to revive the empire of Delhi.

Moldavia, mol-då've-a (Ruman, Moldava; L. Moldavia; Ger. Moldau, mol'dŏw), one of the former so-called Danubian Principalities, now a part of Rumania. It is bounded on the N. and E. by Russia (from which it is separated by the Pruth), on the S. by Wallachia, on the W. by Transylvania, and on the NW. by Bukowina. Area, 14,668 sq. m. Pop. in 1899, 1,832,106. Except along the W. frontier, the country is level, forming part of the vast Rumanian plain, a great grain-producing and grazing region. Towards the W. the plains are succeeded by hills and valleys belonging to the realm of the Carpathians. Moldavia is traversed from N. to S. by the river Sereth, an affluent of the Danube. The boundless pastures feed vast numbers of cattle, horses, sheep, and goats. Swine are bred in the forests. Large game abounds in the region of the Carpathians. The Moldavians are Rumans. The Jews form a considerable part of the urban inhabitants and the gypsies are a picturesque element in the population. The chief cities are Jassy, formerly the capital of the principality of Moldavia, and Galatz. The Wallach (Ruman) principality of Moldavia arose towards the close of the Middle Ages. Its dominions were before very long extended over Bukowina and Bessarabia. To the W. the sister principality of Wallachia arose and struggled almost simultaneously into existence. First Wallachia and then Moldavia became tributary to the Turkish sultans, who, however, for a long period did not actually bring the principalities within their grasp. In the course of the seventeenth century, however, the autonomy of the two states was to a great extent extinguished. From the early part of the eighteenth century Moldavia and Wallachia were ruled by hospodars belonging to the Greek families known as Fanariotes. In the first half of the nineteenth century Russia sought to bring the Danubian Principalities under her control. The Crimean War (1854–56) had as one of its results the emancipation of Moldavia and Wallachia, whose union was consummated in 1859–61, a new state, Rumania, being formed. See RUMANIA.

Mongolia, a vast region of Asia, comprised in the Chinese Empire, mostly between lat. 37° and 50° N. and lon. 88° and 120° E., having Manchuria, from which it is in part separated by the Great Khingan Mountains, on the E.; China and Chinese Turkestan on the S. and SW.; and Russian Asia, on the frontiers of which are the vast bulwarks of the Altai, Khangai, Sayan, and other mountains, on the N. Area roughly estimated at 1,200,000 sq. m. In a broader interpretation the region of Dzungaria in the NW. is included in Mongolia. It is mostly a vast desert, lying at an elevation of from 2500 to 3500 feet, its central part forming the E. half of the Gobi, though here and there this stony and sandy region has productive tracts, feeding herds of cattle belonging to nomadic tribes, and some wheat, barley, and millet are raised. In the N. the country is richly wooded. Its rivers are mostly tributaries to the Amur (through the Argun) and Yenisei (Selenga) systems of waters, though some discharge themselves into extensive lakes, which are most numerous in the NW., the principal being the Ubsa-Nor and Ike-Aral-Nor (Kara-Ussu). The great bend of the Hoang-ho is in the S. The trade is chiefly with China proper, to which the Mongols send live-stock of all kinds, salt, soda, hides, and skins, receiving in return brick tea, silk, cotton and woollen fabrics, boots, metallic wares, etc. A less important trade with Russia has recently developed. Among the numerous trade or caravan routes crossing the region is that from Peking to Maimachin and Kiakhta. The Mongols are of the Buddhist religion and live under various chiefs, who pay tribute to the Chinese emperor. Mongolia is divided into numerous aimaks, or chiefships, these again into "banners," or military tribes, further subdivided into regiments, etc. The supreme administration is vested in the "colonial department" at Peking. The chief city is Urga, in the N. The population is estimated at about 2,000,000, by some much higher. The Mongol conformation has been taken by ethnologists (in a classification now not generally accepted) as the type of one of the main divisions of mankind (the Yellow Race), comprising, in a broad sense, the Chinese, Japanese, Koreans, Indo-Chinese, Tibetans, the Uralo-Altaic peoples (Tartars, Turks, Finns, Magyars), etc., to which some would add the Malayo-Polynesians.

The native tribes all claim descent from the celebrated Genghis Khan, who in the beginning of the thirteenth century united the different races under his sway and established a vast realm, extending from northern China to the Persian Gulf and Caspian Sea. His conquests were continued by his successors. In 1240 the so-called Golden Horde forced the Russian princes to do homage. At this time the Mongols, in their devastating course, penetrated as far as Silesia, where they vanquished the Silesians, Poles, and Teutonic Knights on the field of the Wahlstatt (1241), swept through Hungary, and invaded Asia Minor. The caliphate of Bagdad was extinguished by the Mongols in 1258. A Mongol dynasty was established in China in 1280. The empire founded by Genghis Khan was divided among his successors. In 1480 the Russians threw off the Mongol yoke and soon after the middle of the sixteenth century the fragments of the khanate of Kiptchak, or of the Golden Horde,—the Tartar khanates of Kazan and Astrakhan,—were conquered by Czar Ivan the Terrible. In Persia the Mongol dynasty came to an end early in the fourteenth century and in China the Mongol dynasty was succeeded by the Ming dynasty in 1368. In the latter part of the fourteenth century Timur (Tamerlane) founded a new great Mongol realm, which was short lived. A so-called Mongol (Mogul) dynasty was established by Baber in India in 1526.

Montana, mŏn-tȧ'na, one of the northwestern states of the American Union, bounded N. by British Columbia, Alberta, and Assiniboia, E. by North Dakota and South Dakota, S. by Wyoming and Idaho, and W. by Idaho. Its northern limit is 49° N. lat.; its eastern, 104° W. lon.; its southern is defined principally by the 45th degree of N. lat.; and its western line for the most part follows the crest of the Bitter Root Mountains and the main chain of the Rocky Mountains. Area of the land-surface, 145,310 sq. m.; of the appertaining waters, 770 sq. m.

The Face of the Country is gently rolling in the E., with elevations of from 2000 to 3500 feet, and mountainous in the W. The main range of the Rocky Mountains enters the state from the N., runs 200 miles in a SSE. course, and then curves westward till it reaches the western line of the state, at the junction of the Bitter Root Mountains with the parent chain. To the eastward are found the Little Rocky, Little Bear, Bear Paw, Kay-i-you, Powder River, Gallatin, and other mountain-ranges. Through these the rivers often flow in deeply eroded and picturesque cañons. A number of the higher summits are crowned with perpetual snow. Mount Douglas, the highest elevation of the state, rises to 11,300 feet; Mount Delano, 10,200 ft. Many parts of the state have a remarkably rough surface, with peaks of basalt, tuff, and other volcanic rock. Pine-, cedar- and fir-trees clothe many of the mountain-sides and many of the river-bottoms have much cottonwoood and other timber. Along the Three Forks of the Missouri and elsewhere in the state there is much gently undulating prairie of the finest agricultural capabilities.

Rivers.—The Missouri River, with its three head-waters, —the Madison, Jefferson, and Gallatin,—has its source in this state. The Yellowstone, its largest tributary, flows in this state throughout nearly its whole course. The Maria's, Milk, Musselshell, Big Horn, Rosebud, Powder, Tongue, Sun, Stinking Water, and Beaverhead rivers are tributary to the Missouri (which is navigated by steamboats as far as Fort Benton), directly or through the Yellowstone. The Yellowstone, with some of its branches, is also navigable in good stages of water. In the NW., Clark's Fork of the Columbia issues from the large Flathead Lake. Some of the mountain-streams have an exceedingly rapid descent and, being fed by mountain-snows, their waters afford unfailing motive-power and unexcelled facilities for irrigation.

Geology and Minerals.—The geological strata, especially in those districts which have been very greatly disturbed by volcanic action, are much broken; along the deep river-cañons are exposed the strata of the greater part of the geological series. The Cretaceous formation occupies most of the state, but in the western mountainous region the Paleozoic and Azoic formations are well developed. The Carboniferous strata are thick and there are abundant and well-distributed lignitic coals of Cretaceous or Tertiary age. The coal output for the year 1903 was 1,488,810 short tons, valued at $2,440,846; in 1900 it was valued at nearly $3,000,000. But the great mineral wealth of Montana consists principally in its deposits of gold, silver, lead, and copper. The production of copper is greater than that in any other state. The mineral product of 1899 was as follows: copper, 245,602,214 pounds, valued at $40,941,906; silver, 16,850,755 ounces, having a commercial value of $10,100,000; gold, 233,126 ounces, having a coinage value of $4,819,100; and lead, 20,344,750 pounds, valued at $909,410. In 1903 the copper product was 272,555,854 pounds; silver, 12,642,300 fine ounces; gold (coinage value), $4,411,900.

Agricultural Resources, Climate.—The prairie-lands, river-bottoms, bench-lands, and many of the mountain-valleys offer a wide extent of excellent wheat-land to the agriculturist. No other part of the United States offers greater advantages to the stock-raiser and the wool-grower than Montana, whose rich and nutritious bunch, buffalo, and grama grasses are eagerly fed upon by all the domestic grazing animals. Very little hay-making or winter foddering is required; and in the sheltered valleys horses, cattle, and sheep are allowed to range all winter without artificial protection. In unusually severe winters, however, many animals perish. Much of eastern Montana appears to be too dry for successful general agriculture; and in the mountains and valleys, although the rainfall (which for the entire state is only about 12 inches per annum) is often ample, irrigation has proved exceedingly advantageous. The winter climate is in general much milder than would be expected, considering the latitude and elevation of the state; but there are occasionally seasons when the cold is intense and the mercury not rarely falls to —30° and even —40° F. But in the greater number of winters the cold is not excessive, being tempered by the warm and dry winds, known as the chinooks, which sweep across the mountains; storms are unfrequent. The summer heat frequently rises to 100°. The snowfall is never large, except on high mountain-peaks. The leading agricultural crops in 1900 were: wheat, 1,929,963 bushels; oats, 2,568,735 bushels; barley, 201,527 bushels; potatoes, 640,654 bushels; and hay, 590,658 tons. In sheep-farming and the yield of wool Montana leads all the other states. The quantity of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip of 1900 was 26,020,120 pounds. The number of horned cattle in that year was 968,000, and of horses 330,000. Not many swine are reared in the state.

Non-Agricultural Industries.—At present the leading industries, in addition to stock-raising and farming, are mining, the smelting and refining of ores, stamping and milling of quartz, lumbering, and the manufacturing of flour. The water-power of the state is abundant and not much interrupted by freezing or drought. In 1880 there were only 106 miles of railway in Montana, but in 1887 the number had increased to 1684 miles and in 1900 to 3025 miles.

Objects of Interest.—A portion of the Yellowstone National Park at the head of the Yellowstone lies within the boundaries of this state. This region is celebrated for its wonderful geysers and other thermal and mineral springs, and for its generally striking scenery. Within this state are also the Great Falls of the Missouri.

Educational.—The state university is located at Missoula. Other collegiate institutions are the State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts at Bozeman, the school of mines at Butte, the Montana Wesleyan University at Helena, and the College of Montana at Deerlodge. There is a state normal college at Dillon.

Counties, etc.—The state contains the following counties, —viz., Beaverhead, Broadwater, Carbon, Cascade, Choteau, Custer, Dawson, Deerlodge, Fergus, Flathead, Gallatin, Granite, Jefferson, Lewis and Clark, Madison, Meagher, Missoula, Park, Ravalli, Silverbow, Sweet Grass, Teton, Valley, and Yellowstone; the state also contains the Crow Indian Reservation.

The principal towns are Helena, the capital (pop. in 1900, 10,770), Butte (30,470), Great Falls (14,930), Anaconda (9453), Missoula, and Bozeman.

Government.—The governor and other state officers are elected for 4 years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives. The members of the former are elected for 4 years and those of the latter for 2 years. The state has 1 representative in the national Congress.

Population.—In 1870 the population was 20,595; in 1880, 39,159; in 1890, 132,159; and in 1900, 243,329. The Indians on the different reservations represent the remnants of several once powerful tribes and nations, such as the Piegan, Crow, Pend d'Oreille (Kalispel), Kootenai, Flathead, Assiniboin, Gros Ventre, Sioux, and Cheyenne.

History.—This region until well into the nineteenth century was frequented by no whites except the trapper, the voyageur, and the fur-trader. Its eastern mountains were the abode of wild Indians, like the Crows and Blackfeet, while in the west dwelt the peaceable Flatheads (or Salish), with the Bannacks and other inoffensive tribes. In 1864 Montana was organized as a territory, and within a few years the Northern Pacific R. route was surveyed across it. Gold had been discovered in this region as early as 1852, but it was not till many years later that the greater discoveries of the precious metals occurred. The wonderful mineral resources soon attracted a superior class of settlers. Montana was admitted to the Union as a state in 1889.

The elevation, as generally accepted, is 15,782 feet; but this varies to an extent of several feet, according to the amount of compacted snow on its summit. Limit of the snow-line, 8000–9000 feet above the sea. The summit (which is wholly in French territory) is shrouded in a vast perpetual snow-field, from which descend numerous glaciers, the most famous of which is the Mer de Glace ("sea of ice"), the lower part of which, called the Glacier des Bois ("glacier of the woods"), gives rise to the river Arveyron, 2 miles above Chamouni. Mont Blanc was first ascended by Paccard (accompanied by the guide Balmat), Aug. 8, 1786. It is constructed almost entirely of the granitic protogine rock and has on the summit the observatory established by Janssen in 1893. The mountain is now ascended almost daily in the summer season. Among the principal summits of the Mont Blanc group of mountains are the Dôme du Gouter (14,210 feet) and the Aiguille du Midi (12,608 ft.),—both adjoining the main summit,—the Grandes Jorasses (13,797 ft.), Aiguille du Dru (12,320 ft.), Aiguille Verte (13,540 ft.), and the Aiguille d'Argentière (12,820 ft.). An electric railway planned to ascend the greater part of the way to the summit is now (1905) under consideration.

Montenegro, mon'tà-nà'gro (an Italian name meaning "black mountain," which is also the signification of the Turk. Karadagh, kà-rà'dàg', and of the native Slavic, Crnagora, chĕr-nà-go'rà, a misnomer, the name not being derived from the color of the mountains), a small independent country of Europe, mainly between lat. 42° and 43° N., bounded on the NE. by the Turkish sanjak of Novipazar, on the SE. by Albania, on the SW. by Dalmatia, and on the W. and N. by Herzegovina. It borders for a short distance on the Adriatic. Area, about 3600 sq. m. The surface forms a series of elevated ridges of limestone rocks, with lofty mountain-peaks, one of which, Durmitor, in the N., rises to a height of over 8000 feet. The features of the limestone formation known as the Karst are here present in a remarkable manner, the rivers in places hollowing out their subterranean channels, in which they disappear for long distances. The principal streams are the Maratcha and Zeta, whose united waters fall into the Lake of Scutari, which is partly in Montenegro and partly in Albania. The lofty mountains in the north are clad with fine forests. The cultivation of the soil, except in tiny patches, is impracticable throughout the great part of this rocky little country. Cereals, tobacco, and potatoes are raised; the vine and the fig are cultivated; and there are olive groves in the part nearest to the sea. The inhabitants tend numerous flocks of goats and sheep and there are considerable numbers of large cattle. Fish (from the Lake of Scutari and elsewhere) constitute an important resource in the food supply of a part of the people and smoked fish are a prominent item in the limited exports of the country. There are rich deposits of iron. Communication is mainly by means of bridle-paths, but there are now some fine stretches of carriage road and a railroad is projected from the coast into the interior. The Montenegrins are a Slavic people, an offshoot from the old Serb stock, with an admixture of Albanian blood, and speak a Serb dialect. They are a well-formed, sturdy, and brave mountain folk, honest and moral in their simplicity and poverty. In religion they are Orthodox Greeks, their church being in a measure dependent upon the Russian Church. There are considerable numbers of Albanians and Serbs, the latter Mohammedans. The government is nominally a limited monarchy under a "prince" (Gospodar), there being a council of state partly elected by the people, but in reality the sovereign may be said to possess absolute power. The expenses of the military and educational establishments are partly met by the Russian government. The population of Montenegro is estimated at about 225,000. The capital is the little town of Cettinje. Other places of importance are Podgoritza, Nikshitch, Dulcigno, and Antivari.

The principality of Montenegro arose at the close of the Middle Ages as a fragment of the Servian realm destroyed by the Turks. The Montenegrins, in their almost inaccessible fastnesses, offered a heroic resistance to the Turks and virtually maintained their independence through the centuries. From the early part of the sixteenth century down to the close of the seventeenth the country was ruled by an elective prince-bishop (Vladika). Then for a century and a half the dignity of Vladika was held in hereditary succession by the dynasty of Petrovitch Nyegush. In 1852 Danilo Petrovitch divorced the ecclesiastical from the secular supremacy, proclaiming himself prince. Montenegro took up arms against Turkey in 1876 and after the close of the Russo-Turkish conflict (1877–78) received a large accession of territory.

Montreal, mon'tre-awl' (Fr. Montréal, môn-rā'āl'; L. Mons Rega'lis,—i.e., "Mount Royal"), a city and port of entry of the province of Quebec, Canada, the commercial metropolis of the Dominion of Canada, situated on the S. side of the Island of Montreal, in the St. Lawrence River (here over 2 miles wide), 180 miles (by water) SW. of Quebec, and 420 miles N. of New York. Lat. of McGill Observatory, 45° 30′ 17″ N.; lon. 73° 34′ 38″ W. It is at the head of deep-water navigation and has railway communication with the chief cities of Canada and the United States. The Island of Montreal is situated at the confluence of the Ottawa with the St. Lawrence. It is 32 miles long by about 10 miles broad at the widest part.

Montreal occupies a low tract of land about 2 miles wide between a beautiful elevation, called Mont Réal or "Mount Royal" (elevation, 900 feet), and the river. The principal streets have large well-built edifices, constructed chiefly of limestone quarried near the city. These buildings, combined with the effect of the lofty towers and spires, give Montreal an imposing appearance. Dominion Square is the finest square in the city and has at one corner the archbishop's palace. Among the resident streets may be mentioned Sherbrooke Street. Montreal has numerous imposing and noted public edifices and institutions and many devoted to charitable purposes. Among the principal buildings are the city-hall, court-house, post-office, custom-house, the building of the board of trade (1892–93), seminary of St. Sulpice, church of Notre Dame, general hospital, Grey Nunnery (with upward of 500 professed sisters), Montreal College, McGill University, Academy of Music, Theatre Royal, and other theatres, Victoria skating-rink, Protestant House of Industry and Refuge, Royal Victoria Hospital (opened in 1894), the Hôtel Dieu (a large hospital in which 3000 patients are annually treated), the Villa Maria Convent, Bonsecours Market, art gallery, etc. Among the educational institutions McGill University, founded in 1821, holds first position. It has several faculties, and was attended in 1900–01 by 1111 students. It has associated with it the Redpath Museum of Natural History, the Redpath Library, the Royal Victoria College (for women), and other institutions. The Laval University (branch) was attended in 1901 by 605 students. Montreal has also a Society of Natural History, a Mechanics' Institute, Canadian Institute, Fraser Institute, etc. The church of Notre Dame is 255 feet long and 135 ft. broad, with two towers 227 ft. in height. In the NE. tower is a fine chime of bells, and in the SW. is a bell weighing 29,400 pounds, the heaviest bell in America. Christchurch cathedral (Episcopal), a very fine example of Gothic architecture, is built of Montreal limestone. A magnificent pile is the Roman Catholic Bishop's Church, the Cathedral of St. James (better known as St. Peter's Cathedral), founded in 1868, which measures 333 ft. in length, and is surmounted by a dome 250 ft. in height.

The harbor of Montreal, which is deep enough for the largest vessels, and the Lachine Canal present for several miles a succession of masonry quays and wharves. The canals which have their outlet at this point afford, with the natural waters, uninterrupted navigation from the Strait of Belle Isle to Port Arthur, at the head of Lake Superior, or over a distance of 2260 miles. The river is here crossed by the Victoria Jubilee Bridge, constructed in 1898–99 at a cost of $20,000,000, and which replaces the more famous Victoria Tubular Bridge, built in 1854–59 at a cost of $6,300,000. The city is entered by the Grand Trunk, the Canadian Pacific, the Intercolonial, and the New York Central and Hudson River Rs.

Area, 8578 sq. m. Moravia, like Bohemia, forms a plateau almost enclosed by mountains, having SE.

the Carpathians, NW. the highlands of the Moravian Plateau, and on the NE. the Sudetic Mountains. It belongs almost entirely to the basin of the Danube, to which most of its waters are conveyed by the March or Morava, except in the E., where the Oder rises. Moravia produces cereals abundantly. Large quantities of fine flax and of beets (for sugar) are raised, and fruit is plentiful. Much wine is made. Live-stock of all kinds is numerous. The principal mineral products are iron, coal, graphite, etc. Moravia holds an important place in the manufacture of textiles, especially of woollens. The beet-sugar industry is on a large scale. Beer, brandy, and alcohol are produced in large quantities. The iron- and steel-industry is represented and the government tobacco-factories employ many thousand hands. The government of the province is under a governor and a diet consisting of the archbishop of Olmütz, the bishop of Brünn, and deputies from the landed gentry, the towns, industrial centres, rural communes, and chambers of commerce and trades. At the close of the ninth century, soon after the introduction of Christianity into the region, a powerful Moravian realm arose, embracing (in addition to the present province) Bohemia and other territories. This state soon fell as a result of the Hungarian invasion. From the eleventh century Moravia was generally more or less closely united with Bohemia. Morocco (Arab. Magreb el-Aksa, mā-greb' ĕl ăk'sā, —i.e., "The Extreme West"), a sultanate or empire in the NW. part of Africa, bounded W. by the Atlantic Ocean, N. by the Mediterranean Sea, E. by Algeria, and S. by the Sahara (or Great) Desert. Most of its area within defined limits is included between the parallels of 28° and 36° N. latitude and the meridians of 1° and 11° W. longitude. The Saharan frontier is still largely unsettled. The area is roughly placed at about 200,000 sq. m. The country is traversed diagonally from NE. to SW., throughout its whole extent, by the chains of the Atlas Mountains, on the NW. side of which lie the old kingdoms of Fez and Morocco and on the opposite side the territories or minor kingdoms of Tafilelt, Draa, El-Harish, Adrar, Gezulah, Sus el-Adna, and Sus el-Aksa (that is, "the extreme or farthest limit").

Relief of the Land.—Physically considered, Morocco may be divided into four regions. 1. The great range of the Atlas, composed of several more or less parallel chains, which send their ramifications throughout the greater portion of the country, even into the peninsular projection of Tangier, and are in their main divisions conveniently divided into the Southern (or Anti-Atlas), the High Atlas, and the Central Atlas. The loftiest or better-known summits are the Jebel-Miltsin, Tizi-Tamjurt (both SE. of the city of Morocco), Tizi-Likumpt, and Jebel-Ayashin, all of which exceed 11,000 feet in elevation, and two, perhaps, 14,000 ft. 2. Er-Rif, or the northern maritime district, comprising the chains of mountains which rise at no great distance from the Mediterranean Sea ("Outer Atlas"). 3. The wide belt of fertile plain, intermixed with hill and valley, which lies between the two preceding regions and extends from the Mulwiya (Muluya) River to Mogador, a distance of 450 miles. 4. The plains and valleys SE. of the Atlas. These last all terminate in or adjoin the Great Desert. The summits of the Atlas often rise into peaks, but their scenery is characterized rather by rounded heights clothed with luxuriant forests than by rugged and precipitous forms. The higher elevations are covered with snow during many months of the year and they appear to carry signs of ancient glaciation. There are no modern glaciers. See Atlas Mountains.

In the extreme N., near Ceuta, the Jebel-Musa ("Mountain of Musa") faces the rock of Gibraltar with an elevation of about 2700 feet. The two are parts of the same mountain-chain, severed in the comparatively modern period of the formation of the Strait of Gibraltar.

Rivers.—Morocco has the largest rivers in northern Africa W. of Egypt. Those flowing from the N. side of the Atlas have their channels well filled with water; but those flowing from the S. are dry in summer. The Muluya, or Mulwiya, rising in a knot of the Atlas, about lat. 32° 30′ N., flows NE. to the Mediterranean, with a course of some 350 miles. The Sebu descends from Mount Sililgo westward to the Atlantic, in a course of 160 miles. The Um er-Rebiah (or Morbeya), which enters the sea at Azamor, lat. 33° 17′ N., has a course of about 230 miles; and the Tensift, which passes near the city of Morocco, has a length of about 190 miles. Of the rivers which discharge their waters into the desert, the Guir (Ghir or Gher), the most easterly, seems to have a course, SSE., occasionally traceable for 300 or 400 miles. The Ziz, which, with its numerous affluents, waters a very fertile and populous country, is spent before it attains half that length. The Draa (or Daraa), rising in the central and most elevated portion of the Atlas, first flows S. for nearly 200 miles, forms a lake called Ed-Debaya, and then, turning W., enters the ocean about lat. 28° 18′ N., after a course estimated to be 700 miles; the lower portion of its bed, however, and the lake, are periodically dry. The bed of the Draa is by many geographers assumed to be the southern boundary of the empire. The coast, being generally low and little broken, offers few good harbors. Of these, Tangier and Mogador are the best; the rest, as El-Araish (or Larache), Salee, Rabat, Mazagan, Azamor, etc., are but open roadsteads, mostly at the mouths of rivers.

Minerals.—Little is as yet known of the mineral resources of the country, but they would appear not to be very important, some rich ores (copper, iron, lead, antimony), however, occurring in the mountains but remaining practically unworked. Amethysts of great size and beauty have been found in the mountains.

Climate, Vegetation, Agriculture, etc.—The climate is generally fine and on the whole salubrious for Europeans. Towards the seaboard the extremes of temperature lie within moderate limits and the general temperature, as at Mogador and Tangier, is kept between 60° in the coldest month and 70°–85° in the hottest month (August). The extremes are much more accentuated in the interior, where the nights are frequently disagreeably cold and the days intensely hot. In the city of Morocco the thermometer has been observed to mark 110°. The rainfall varies considerably according to the region. The flora of Morocco is essentially of the Mediterranean type. The forests of the coast mountains contain, among other species of oak, that which yields cork. In the higher regions of the Atlas are found the Aleppo pine, the cedar of Lebanon, and many varieties of oxycedrus and of juniper, yielding fragrant gums. The date-palm and the dwarf-palm form extensive woods E. and S. of the Atlas. In the maritime region grows the Eleodendron argan, from the olive-like fruit of which is extracted an excellent oil. Among the wild plants of the southern provinces may be mentioned the caper and archil, the latter an important article of commerce.

The agriculture of Morocco is still in a primitive condition, although large crops are frequently produced. The cereal crops are wheat, barley, maize, and durrah (or millet). The last constitutes the chief support of the population, though beans, the esculent arum, and canary-seed are consumed in large quantities by the poorer classes. The vine is cultivated near the towns for the sake of the fresh grapes and raisins. Most of the fruits of southern Europe and the Canary Islands are to be found here in sufficient abundance. The date is an important resource. A large portion of the population leads a pastoral life. The wealth of the Arab tribes consists chiefly in their herds and flocks. Horses of an excellent breed are numerous, and still more important are the sheep, the wool of which is frequently of the finest possible description.

Animal Life.—The lion still haunts the plains on the sides of the Atlas, where the leopard is also met with. The wild boar inhabits the forests. Gazelles and several species of large antelope enter the country from the desert. More formidable than beasts of prey are the locusts, which come from the desert in countless multitudes, spreading desolation over the fields. The ostrich is found on the S. frontiers, and the ostrich feathers brought from that quarter are the best known in commerce.

Industries, Commerce.—The industries of the land are few and are in the main represented by the manufactures of cloth caps, leather, carpets, pots, silk stuffs, ornaments in gold, silver, copper, and brass, and jewelry. Fez makes and exports great quantities of the "fez" cap. The tanners of Mequinez, Fez, and Tafilelt have a high reputation. The Morocco carpets, called by the Moors Sherbiah and Katifah, and much esteemed in Europe, largely under the name of Turkey carpets, come in great part from Rabat. The Jews alone do business as goldsmiths and jewellers. Morocco has considerable commerce with the East, much of which is carried on by caravan service; it also has an extended caravan trade with the Sudan, across the Sahara, Tibuktu being an important mart for the sale of salt, woollen mantles, sashes, daggers, tobacco, looking-glasses, etc., for which ivory, horns, incense, ostrich feathers, gold-dust, gums, indigo, cardamom, malaghetta pepper, and other articles are received in exchange.

The population of Morocco is variously estimated, the data presenting wide discrepancies. According to an estimate made in 1904 by the German statistician Supan, based upon the figures presented in the recent work of the Marquis de Segonzac, it would be in the neighborhood of 7,000,000. The inhabitants are divided into several distinct races, the Berbers and Arabs constituting the great bulk of the population. The Berbers, who represent the ancient inhabitants of the country, are divided into Amazirgs and Shelluhs, the latter of whom, inhabiting the high plains of the Atlas, devote themselves to agriculture. The Arabs, who, together with the Moors, probably constitute about one-half of the total population, form the bulk of the rural inhabitants in the plains. In the towns along the coast are found the Moors. The Moors are a mixed race representing an admixture of the blood of the Arabs, who conquered the country 1200 years ago, with that of the Hamitic Berbers and other ancient inhabitants, descendants in part of the Mauri (whence the name Moors). They speak an Arabic dialect and are Mohammedans. There are many negroes. A considerable number of Jews are to be found in all the commercial towns. The Europeans number about 4000–5000. The education given at the schools in the chief towns and completed at the university of Fez does not go beyond the theology of the Koran.

The sovereign or sultan of Morocco, styled by Europeans emperor, bears the title of Emir el-Mumenin, or "Lord of the true Believers." His power is absolute. He has a cabinet, or council of state, at the head of which is a grand vizier. He is the spiritual as well as the temporal head of the state. The law is administered according to the teachings of the Koran. There are two cities which are the Sultan's residence,—Fez (which is the chief capital) and Morocco. These are both situated in the interior. Another large inland city is Mequinez. The most important maritime town is Tangier. Other busy seaports are Casablanca (Dar-el-Beida), Mazagan, El-Araish, Rabat, Saffi, Mogador, and Tetuan.

History.—Morocco corresponds nearly to the Mauretania Tingitana of the Romans, peopled by the Mauri (or Maurusii). The Roman dominion lasted from the first century B.C. until the early part of the fifth century A.D., when it was extinguished by the Vandals, whose African kingdom, after an existence of a hundred years, was overthrown by the Byzantines. At the beginning of the eighth century the Saracens (Arabs) had made themselves masters of the whole of northern Africa, whence, in 711, they crossed over into Spain, which they conquered. Among the dynasties that arose in what is now Morocco in the course of the Middle Ages were the Edrisides, the Almorawides (who founded the city of Morocco in the second half of the eleventh century and established their sway over Mohammedan Spain), the Almohades (who, in the twelfth century, supplanted the Almorawides in Morocco and Spain), and the Merinides. In the latter part of the Middle Ages Morocco was a great seat of Mohammedan learning. The expulsion of the Jews from Spain, and later of the Moriscos, added a large and intelligent element to the population of Morocco. From the middle of the sixteenth century the chief power was in the hands of the Sherifs of Tafilelt, under whom the dominions of Morocco were extended eastward and southward. In the second half of the seventeenth century a side branch of the Sherifs came into possession of the throne. This dynasty has continued to rule until the present day.

Morocco (Arab. Marakesh'), one of the capitals of the sultanate or empire of Morocco, situated on an elevated plain on the NW. slope of the Atlas Mountains, about 90 miles from the Atlantic Ocean and 4 miles from the left bank of the river Tensift, which is crossed by an old stone bridge of over 30 arches. Morocco, as approached from a distance, in its environment of palm-groves and smiling gardens, presents an attractive aspect, but seen from within it has to a great extent the appearance of a city in ruins. It is surrounded by a lofty dilapidated wall, with towers at frequent intervals and with a number of huge gates. Much of the enclosed area consists of gardens and open spaces. The streets are narrow and crooked and lined with mean, low houses. The most prominent object is a lofty tower of the Kutubia mosque. The imperial residence embraces a vast area, consisting of an agglomeration of houses, mosques, gardens, lanes, and open places. Near it is the Jewish quarter (El-Millah), which is surrounded by a wall. The population of Morocco is estimated at about 50,000. About one-seventh of this number are Jews, who carry on most of the trade of the place. In former times the town was industrially important through its manufactures of morocco leather. Morocco was founded in the second half of the eleventh century by the sect of the Almorawides and rose to be one of the most populous cities of Islam, famous as a seat of learning. Centuries of decline have left nothing of its former splendor.

Moscow, a government of Russia, mostly between lat. 54° 50′ and 56° 40′ N. and lon. 34° 50′ and 38° 50′ E., enclosed by the governments of Tver, Vladimir, Ryazan, Tula, Kaluga, and Smolensk. Area, 12,875 sq. m. Its surface is a plain. It belongs to the basin of the Volga, which flows for a short distance on its northern border. The Oka, an affluent of the Volga, flows along the southern border, and drains a great part of the government through its affluents, the Moskva and Klyasma. About two-fifths of the surface is covered with forests. Coal is mined in considerable quantities. Moscow takes the lead among the governments of Russia in manufactures, the textile industry having grown to vast proportions. Pop. in 1897, 2,433,356. Capital, Moscow.

Moscow, mos'kō (Russ. Moskva, mosk-vȧ′; L. Mosqua; Fr. Moscou, mos'koo′; Ger. Moskau, mos'kow), a city of Russia, capital of the government of Moscow and formerly of the Russian empire, situated on the Moskva, 400 miles SE. of St. Petersburg. Lat. of observatory, 55° 45′ 19″ N.; lon. 37° 34′ 18″ E. Although superseded 200 years ago by St. Petersburg as the political centre of Russia, Moscow has remained in a way the focus of the Russian people, venerated as the great centre about which the most sacred traditions of the nation cluster and as the coronation city of the czars. It is here that the national life of Russia may be said to pulsate (the popular saying being that St. Petersburg is the brain and Moscow the heart of Russia), while commercially and industrially Moscow is the leading city in the empire. In population it is not greatly inferior to St. Petersburg. Moscow with its hundreds of churches, whose cupolas and walls are resplendent with gold and varied hues, with its venerable monasteries, encircled with walls and towers, and with its stately modern edifices, contrasting with the diminutive dwellings of its humbler classes, presents a strikingly picturesque appearance. The city is built on and between several eminences. The Moskva pursues a tortuous course through it and is joined near the centre of the city by a little stream called the Yauza. The nucleus about which Moscow has grown up is the famous Kremlin, the holy place of the Russians, which rises like a citadel in the middle of the city on the left bank of the Moskva. Adjoining the Kremlin on the E. is the Kitai-Gorod (a name commonly rendered by "Chinese City"), the main business quarter, closely and irregularly built. This constitutes with the Kremlin the inner city, or the "City" (Gorod). The Kitai-Gorod is shut off from the rest of Moscow by an ancient, massive, and lofty whitewashed wall, with numerous towers and turrets, gleaming with bright colors. About the Gorod extends, fan-like, the so-called White City (Biely-Gorod), bounded by a great belt of boulevards. This is the most elegant quarter of Moscow, built in modern style, with fine public buildings, palaces, and handsome shops. Beyond the White City, extending in a broad zone, is the section known as the Earth City (Zemlynoi-Gorod), so called from the enclosing earthen wall of the seventeenth century, on whose site is a belt of boulevards stretching for a distance of about 9 miles, and bearing in part the name of Garden Street (Sadovaya). Beyond the Earth City come the faubourgs, greatly exceeding in area all the rest of Moscow. These outlying sections are mainly the abode of the laboring classes. Here are numerous factories and extensive railway yards. Outside of the business sections and the quarters of the wealthier classes, Moscow consists in great part of dwellings of one or two stories.

The Kremlin, with its lofty encompassing walls and towers, its imposing gateways, and its churches soaring aloft with their clusters of gilded cupolas, presents a spectacle unique among the architectural displays of the world. It occupies a hill rising steeply from the banks of the Moskva to a height of about 125 feet, and is roughly triangular in form. The wall is over a mile in circuit and about 65 ft. high, and is surmounted by 21 towers. There are 5 gateways leading into the sacred precincts. From the Red Square, which is between the Kremlin and the Kitai-Gorod, the gate of the Redeemer and the Nicholas gate, both of them monumental structures, conduct into the Kremlin. The former, which is 200 ft. high, leads to the Square of the Czars. To the NW. of this is a great group of structures, consisting of the convent of the Ascension, the Little Palace, and the Tchudov monastery (Monks' monastery), called the Monastery of Wonders, formerly the residence of the metropolitan of Moscow. In the convent of the Ascension (a convent for women) is a cathedral with 5 gilded cupolas, the burial-place of many Russian princesses. At the SW. end of the Square of the Czars towers the remarkable Ivan the Great belfry, about 300 ft. high, containing about 30 bells, the largest of which is supposed to weigh 70 tons. In this huge bell-tower is the treasury of the patriarchs of Moscow. At the foot of the belfry, on a granite pedestal, stands the famous great bell of Moscow (the Bell of the Czars), the largest casting of its kind in the world. It is about 25 ft. high and weighs over 200 tons. It was cast in 1735, and has never been suspended. To the SW. of the Square of the Czars is the Cathedral Square. Here are the cathedrals of the Ascension, of the Assumption, and of the Archangel Michael. The first-named (the Uspensky), standing near the centre of the Kremlin, dates from the fifteenth century and was designed by an Italian architect. This is the coronation church. It has a great dome and cupolas at the corners. The cathedral of the Archangel Michael, likewise designed by an Italian, contains the tombs of the czars down to Peter the Great. The cathedral of the Assumption, which is the baptismal church of the czars, has 9 cupolas and a gilded roof. To the SW. of the Cathedral Square is the mass of buildings constituting the Great Palace, comprising several palaces and churches, and containing magnificent apartments. In one part of it, detached from the main structure, is the treasure-chamber, containing in its various halls an extraordinary collection of regalia of priceless value and products of the gold- and silver-smith's art of different nations, weapons, glass-ware, and miscellaneous curiosities. To the N. of the Great Palace is the building of the Holy Synod, in which are the church of the Twelve Apostles and the library of the synod (formerly the library of the patriarchs), containing rare treasures in Greek and Slavic manuscripts. Adjoining this edifice are the Kremlin barracks, at one corner of which is the great Czar Cannon. The N. end of the Kremlin is occupied by the vast arsenal and the Palace of Justice (formerly the building of the senate).

Adjoining the N. end of the Kremlin is the handsome building of the Historical Museum. Close by is the Kazan cathedral. These two edifices are at the NW. end of the Red Square. At the opposite end is the cathedral of St. Basil, which, with its many cupolas and towers in manifold shapes and hues, is the most striking edifice of Moscow. On the side of the Red Square opposite the Kremlin and extending farther towards the Moskva are vast ranges of buildings, the so-called Commercial Blocks, recently erected, with their great glass-covered arcades. In the Ilyinka, the central thoroughfare of the Kitai-Gorod, lined with wholesale houses, stands the handsome exchange. To the W. of the Kremlin are the Alexander Gardens. A little farther to the W. are the extensive buildings of the university of Moscow, the edifice containing the principal archives of the foreign office, and the Rumiantseff Museum, a fine Renaissance building. Near by is the new Alexander III. Museum of Fine Arts. A short distance to the S., on the bank of the Moskva, stands the splendid modern church of the Redeemer, with its 5 gilded cupolas, the largest having a diameter of about 100 feet. This is the finest of the churches of Moscow.

From the N. apex of the Kremlin extends the Tverskaya Ulitsa (Tver Street) in a NW. direction, with its many beautiful shops. On it is the palace of the governor-general. About ¼ of a mile N. of the Kremlin is the large Theatre Square adorned with a monumental fountain. Here are the imperial Great Theatre, a sumptuous edifice, and the imperial Little Theatre. From the square the Petrovka, a fine and animated business thoroughfare, runs northward. About ¼ of a mile to the E. of the Theatre Square is the Lubyanskaya Square, flanked on the E. side by the building of the Consistory. In the NE. corner of Moscow is the beautiful Sokolniki Park, the principal pleasure-ground of the people of Moscow, with its countless diminutive summer-dwellings. Among the many monastic establishments of Moscow, in addition to those already mentioned, are the historically interesting convent of the Virgins, in the SW. corner of the city; the Donsky monastery, within whose great encompassing walls, painted red, are 7 churches; the Vissoko-Petrovsky monastery, dating from the fourteenth century; and the Simonovsky monastery. The city has a number of fine public monuments, such as the triumphal arch in commemoration of the year 1812, the Pushkin monument, and the monument erected to the memory of the patriots Minin and Pozharski.

At the head of the educational institutions of Moscow is the university, founded in 1755, with about 4500 students. Its library contains 300,000 volumes. Among other institutions are the Polytechnic Institute, the Imperial School of Engineering, the Agricultural Academy, the Imperial Lyceum, the Lazareff Academy of Oriental Languages, and the ecclesiastical academy. Among the public collections are the Rumiantseff Museum, containing a vast library and valuable ethnological collections; the Natural History Museum, with a library of 180,000 volumes; the Historical Museum; the Museum of Art Industries; and the Tretyakoff Gallery, containing the largest collection of the works of modern Russian painters. Moscow is the seat of the Imperial Society of Naturalists and many other learned societies. About 100 newspapers are published in the city. The Imperial Foundling Hospital is the largest institution of its kind in the world.

The manufacturing industries of Moscow are on a vast scale. The textile industry is the most important, cotton, silk, and woollen fabrics being all produced in immense quantities. The manufacture of metallic wares and machinery comes next in importance. Paper, clothing, shoes, and carriages are extensively manufactured, and among other important industries are tanning, the preparation of food products, and the making of wooden articles. The city is one of the leading commercial centres of Europe. It is the principal tea-distributing centre of the continent. The population of Moscow in 1812 was estimated at 250,000; in 1864 it was 364,000; in 1882, 768,000; in 1902, 1,091,739 (inclusive of suburbs, 1,173,427). The average temperature of the month of January is 12°; of July, 66°.

Moscow rose to importance about the close of the thirteenth century. It became the chief seat of sovereignty in Russia in 1328, superseding Vladimir. About two centuries later its sway was extended over the whole of the Russian dominions, the Muscovite realm becoming synonymous with Russia. The most important event in the modern history of Moscow is the entry of Napoleon and his army into the city and its burning by the Russians, Sept., 1812.

Mosul, or Mossul, mo-sool′, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in the heart of ancient Assyria, capital of the vilayet and sanjak of Mosul, on the right bank of the Tigris, 220 miles NNW. of Bagdad. It is surrounded by a dilapidated wall. The houses are built with flat roofs, on which the inmates sleep in hot weather. The town presents little of architectural interest. The most noteworthy of the many ecclesiastical edifices, Mohammedan and Christian, is the Great Mosque, with a leaning minaret. Mosul is no longer the busy emporium of commerce which it once was, but it has still a considerable trade, mostly by caravan. The traffic is mainly in gall-nuts (the chief item of export), cotton, wool, hides, wax, and gum. The town has greatly declined from its former position as an industrial centre. Among the products for which it was once noted were the stuffs called muslins, from the name of the town. But little of the textile industry now remains. The climate is extremely hot in summer and the winters are mild. Near by, on the E. bank of the river, which is crossed by a long bridge, partly of masonry and partly of boats, are the remains of ancient Nineveh. Wild boars, gazelles, and other game are found in the surrounding district. Mosul has been a prominent centre of Roman Catholic missionary activity. Pop. estimated at 60,000, mostly Arabs by speech. There are several thousand Christians of various sects and many Jews. The vilayet of Mosul has an area of about 35,000 sq. m. and a population estimated at about 350,000.

Munich, mu'nik (Ger. München, mün'kẹn; L. Mona'chium), the capital of Bavaria and of the district of Upper Bavaria, on the Isar, 35 miles SE. of Augsburg. Lat. of observatory, 48° 8′ 45″ N.; lon. 11° 36′ 32″ E. Elevation above the sea, 1700 feet. The city is finely situated in a plain, at a distance of about 25 miles from the Alps, the proximity to which renders the climate subject to sudden changes. The mean temperature for the year is 45°; the mean for January, 28°; and for July, 64°.

The centre and focus of the life of the city is the Max-Joseph-Platz, adorned with the monument of King Max Joseph and containing the royal palace (with the Königsbau, in the style of the Pitti Palace of Florence, the Alte Residenz, and the Festsaalbau) and the national theatre. From this central square the Maximilianstrasse, 1 mile in length, containing the government buildings and the Bavarian national museum (with rich collections illustrating the progress of civilization and art), leads directly to the Isar, here crossed by the Maximiliansbrücke (540 feet long), on the opposite side of which is the Maximilianeum, an institution designed for the higher instruction in studies pertaining to the civil service. The handsome Ludwigstrasse, 40 yards in width, leads from the Hofgarten to the Siegesthor (or Gate of Victory), dedicated to the Bavarian army and constructed in the style of the arch of Constantine in Rome. On this stately avenue are the Feldherrnhalle (Commander's Hall), the Odeon, war office, royal library (with upward of 900,000 volumes), Ludwigskirche, academy of art, and the university. The last, founded in 1472, was attended in 1903–04 by 4609 students.

Munich is rich in institutions of all kinds. Among the most famous of these are the Old Pinakothek (erected in 1826–36), the New Pinakothek (erected in 1846–53),—both containing vast collections of paintings; the Glyptothek, or museum of sculptures (1816–30); the Kunstgewerbehaus (industrial art building); ethnographical museum; academy of science, with extensive collections of natural history, physical apparatus, etc.; botanical garden; and the Polytechnic Institute (with an attendance in 1901–02 of 2358). Among the ecclesiastical buildings the first place is occupied by the Frauenkirche, the cathedral of the Archbishopric of Munich and Freising, dating from 1468, and having a length of 320 feet. Other buildings and monuments of note in the city are the Old Rathaus, the New Rathaus, the Basilica, the Isarthor, Propylæa (a magnificent gateway completed in 1862), and the Ruhmeshalle (or Hall of Fame), near which is the colossal statue of Bavaria by Schwanthaler, 62 feet in height. Munich has extensive military establishments, including hospitals, barracks, artillery workshops, a military academy, royal arsenal, and military museum.

Among the industries of Munich brewing occupies the leading place, immense quantities of beer being exported to foreign countries. There are manufactures of leather, gloves, machinery, rubber goods, artificial flowers, furniture, paper, cars, carriages, etc. The optical and mathematical instruments of Munich are celebrated throughout the world, as are likewise the products of its photographic, lithographic, and book-printing establishments. Among the art-industries is also glass-painting. The history of Munich dates from 1158. Pop. in 1900, 499,932. The number of inhabitants has trebled since 1870.

With its arcades, quaint gabled houses, and irregular streets it has preserved an old-time appearance. On the site of the old fortifications are now promenades. The principal buildings are the cathedral, begun in the thirteenth century; the graceful church of St. Lambert, recently restored; the fourteenth-century church of Our Lady, with fine stained glass; the Ludgerikirche; the castle, formerly the episcopal residence and now used for administrative purposes; the town-hall, containing a room known as the Friedensaal, in which the Peace of Westphalia was signed in 1648; the Renaissance Weigh-House; and the Stadtkeller, containing the museum of the Society of Arts. Among the educational institutions are a university (constituted in 1902 by the addition of a faculty of law and political science to those of theology and philosophy in the former Academy of Münster), with a Pauline library containing 150,000 volumes and a royal pedagogical school. The town posseses a zoological garden. The industries of Münster comprise the sculpture of marble, brewing, distilling, and the manufacture of linen, cotton goods, paper, and leather. Pop. in 1871, 24,815; in 1901, 63,776.

Münster rose to great commercial prosperity in the Middle Ages and contended successfully for its liberties against the prince-bishops of Münster, to whose power it finally succumbed in the seventeenth century. It was here that John of Leyden, the Anabaptist leader, set up in 1534 his Kingdom of Zion which collapsed in 1535, leaving behind a record of foul excesses. The bishopric of Münster, which ranked among the larger ecclesiastical states of the old German Empire, and which at the end was ruled by the archbishops of Cologne, had a territory of about 3800 sq. m. It was secularized in 1803.

Muscat, Maskat, or Mascat (Arab. pron. mâs-kât′; anc. Mos'cha), the chief city of Oman, capital of the dominions of the imam (or sultan) of Oman and a seaport of great commercial importance, on the S. shore of the Gulf of Oman, a short distance from the open waters of the Indian Ocean, near the E. angle of Arabia. Lat. 23° 34′ N.; lon. 58° 50′ E. The harbor (or cove) of Muscat is an inlet about three-quarters of a mile long, with half that width, opening NW. and completely sheltered from the prevailing monsoons. The city of Muscat, which is partially fortified, stands at the S. side of the cove and rises in terrace-form along cliffs 400 or 500 feet high. It is a meanly built town, the sultan's palace, the governor's house, and a few minarets, alone rising above the mass of low flat-roofed houses. The streets are extremely narrow. Muscat is one of the hottest places in the world. The thermometer, in the shade, rarely descends below 90° and occasionally rises to 115°–120°. The excellence of the port, and its convenient position not far from the entrance of the Persian Gulf, make it important as a station for shipping. A few miles to the W. is the considerable town of Muttra, little inferior to Muscat in population. Here are the docks for building and repairing shipping and the quarters of the smiths. Muscat is the emporium of eastern Arabia, the bulk of the commerce of Oman passing throught it. The port is usually touched at by vessels going up the Persian Gulf. The combined population of Muscat and the adjoining villages is thought to be about 60,000 (Arabs, Persians, Syrians, East Indians, Afghans, etc., chiefly the first-named).

Nanking, nȧn`king′, or Nankin (the "Southern Capital," as distinguished from Peking, the "Northern Capital"), called also Kiang-ning, a city of China, capital of the province of Kiang-su and anciently of southern China, situated on the right bank of the Yang-tse-kiang, 130 miles (direct) from its mouth, and about 580 miles SSE. of Peking. Lat. 32° 2′ N.; lon. 118° 49′ E. Its ancient walls can be traced over a distance of many miles, but the modern walls are of much less extent. The part of the city occupied by the Manchus is separated by a wall from the Chinese town. The most remarkable structure in Nanking was formerly the Porcelain Tower, built in the early part of the fifteenth century and destroyed by the Tai-ping rebels, during whose occupation the city suffered much. This magnificent and fantastic edifice, said to have been erected at a fabulous cost, was of an octagonal form, 261 feet high, and had 9 stories. Among notable objects may be mentioned the "tomb of the kings," supposed to be of the Ming dynasty, with gigantic armed figures on the avenue leading to it; the government palace, a marine school, royal printing-house, arsenal, and observatory. Nanking has manufactures of crape, satin, paper, artificial flowers, cannon and other materials of war, and China (or Indian) ink, and gives its name to the well-known "Nankeen" cotton cloth, which is also made throughout the whole province. Nanking has recently been made a treaty-port, but it has little foreign commerce. By the Grand Canal, which crosses the Yang-tse-kiang about 50 miles to the E., it communicates directly with Peking. Nanking is the residence of a viceroy, with authority over the provinces of Kiang-su, Kiang-si, and Ngan-hwei, and is a great military depot. It is the chief seat of literature in the empire. The treaty between China and the British, which terminated the Opium War, was signed at Nanking in Aug., 1842. In 1853 the Taipings assaulted Nanking, took it, and made it their capital. It was captured by the Imperialists in 1864. Pop. estimated at 250,000.

Nantes, nants (Fr. pron. nônt; anc. Condivin'cum, afterwards Namne'tes), a city of France, capital of the department of Loire-Inférieure, on the river Loire, at the confluence of the Erdre and Sèvre-Nantaise, 215 miles SW. of Paris. The city is built partly on several islands in the Loire, communication being maintained by means of numerous bridges. The banks of the rivers for a distance of several miles are lined with spacious quays, along which extend rows of stately buildings. The principal public edifices are the cathedral of St. Pierre, a portion of which dates from the twelfth century, with a richly sculptured portal; the castle of the old dukes of Brittany, an enormous mass of irregular buildings; the Hôtel de la Préfecture, the exchange, the Palais de Justice, Hôtel de Ville, church of St. Nicolas, museum of natural history, museum of paintings, the Dobrée Museum, and theatres. Among the open places are the Place Royale and Place Louis XVI., the latter adorned with a monument 90 feet high. There is a splendid promenade in the eastern part of the city, extending from the Place Cours de Saint André to the Place Duchesse Anne. Nantes is distinguished by its many beautiful sculptural monuments. The city is the seat of a bishop and possesses medical, law, and hydrographical schools, agricultural, horticultural, and industrial societies, a public library of 180,000 volumes, observatory, a splendid botanical garden, natural history and archæological museums, and a naval arsenal. The hospitals are on a vast scale. Merchant-vessels are built here, besides which the town has numerous manufactories of textiles, machinery, soap, glass, metallic wares, chemicals, etc., also cannon-foundries, sugar-refineries, potteries, distilleries, etc. Tobacco, sardines, and preserved meats are also among the leading industrial products. A ship-canal has recently been constructed to enable large vessels to approach the city, which has an extensive foreign commerce. The trade is facilitated both by the Loire and by canals, which communicate with Brest and elsewhere, and by the railways which meet here.

Nantes was the capital of the Gallic tribe of the Namnetes. In the Middle Ages it was the capital of the duchy of Brittany. The most memorable event connected with its history is the famous Edict of Nantes issued by Henry IV., in 1598, securing to the Protestants the free exercise of their religion. Its revocation by Louis XIV. in 1685 was a calamity to the kingdom. Pop. in 1891, 122,750; in 1901, 117,505.

Naples, nā'pẹlz (It. Napoli, nä'po-le; anc. Neap'olis), the most populous city of Italy, capital of the province of Naples and formerly the capital of the kingdom of Naples, situated on the N. side of the Bay of Naples, at the foot of Mount Vesuvius, 118 miles SE. of Rome. Lat. of observatory, 40° 51′ 8″ N.; lon. 14° 15′ 5″ E. The mean temperature of the year is 61° Fahr.; winter, 47°.6; summer, 76°.1. The extreme range is between about 26° (January) and 104°, snow occasionally lying on the ground. The city is beautifully situated on the curving shores of the large and picturesque bay to which it gives its name. It extends partly along the shore and partly amphitheatrically up the acclivity of the adjacent hills, being bounded on the W. by the picturesque height of Posilipo. On the E. rise the lofty tops of Vesuvius and Somma. The charms of the surrounding country are enhanced by the numerous villas and other objects with which art has embellished it. The city is divided into two very unequal sections by the heights and connecting ridges of the Capodimonte (crowned by the royal Palazzo di Capodimonte), Sant' Elmo (with the old Castello Sant' Elmo, now used as a prison), and Pizzofalcone, at whose extremity, projecting into the sea, is the Castello dell' Ovo, near which is the swarming quarter of Santa Lucia. Eastward and southeastward of this line of heights is the major part of the city, the old quarters and the business centre, which has been largely reconstructed since 1884. Westward of this section is the smaller Naples, in which are located the greater number of the hotels and the beautiful pleasure ground known as the Villa Nazionale, containing the famous aquarium and zoological station, the most perfectly organized institutions of their kind in the world.

The modern streets of Naples are regular, clean, and well paved with square blocks of lava, but the older ones are for the most part inconveniently narrow. Some of the most congested sections have recently been reconstructed through government activity, with great gain to public health and morals. Vast sums have also been expended by the city and state on a great system of sewerage, and extensive new quarters have sprung up to accommodate the overflowing population. The houses are large, substantial, and lofty, averaging not less than five or six stories, with flat roofs, to which the inmates often resort. The street which forms the chief thoroughfare is the Via Roma, formerly known as the Toledo, which traverses the principal portion of the city from N. to S. Among the other great thoroughfares are the Strada del Duomo and the Corso Garibaldi, both abutting on the Strada Nuova, near the harbor. The Corso Vittorio Emanuele is a long, tortuous street in the western part of the city, winding along the slopes of Sant' Elmo, and affording magnificent views. There are numerous squares, among the principal being the Piazza del Plebiscito, on which are the royal palace and the church of San Francesco di Paola; the Piazza del Municipio, with the handsome town-hall; and the Piazza del Mercato, or market-place. The most prominent of the newer thoroughfares is the Corso Umberto Primo, which was constructed in 1888–94 through the most densely populated portion of the city; and the Galleria Umberto Primo, built after the style of the famous Victor Emmanuel arcade in Milan, and measuring 160 yards in greatest length. Westward from the Castello dell' Ovo ("castle of the egg," so named from its oval form), stretches the curving strand (Spiaggia). Here is the celebrated Riviera di Chiaja, lined with stately edifices, the fashionable promenade of Naples. Between it and the shore is the Villa Nazionale, in front of which is a splendid quay, the Via Caracciolo.

Among the edifices most deserving of notice are the cathedral, a large Gothic building, begun in 1272, and dedicated to St. Januarius, for the preservation of whose relics a magnificent chapel was built at the beginning of the seventeenth century; the church Dei Santi Apostoli; the church of San Paolo Maggiore, internally faced with marble; the churches of Santa Maria del Parto (Chiesa del Sannazaro), San Domenico Maggiore, the Annunziata, San Severo, San Filippo Neri, and other churches, to the number of 400, several of them of architectural merit, and almost all of them richly decorated. Among the buildings devoted to secular purposes are the Palazzo Reale, or royal palace, an immense pile measuring 185 yards in length, richly fitted up and adorned with paintings; the Palazzo di Capodimonte, already referred to, commanding magnificent views, and adorned with fine sculptures, paintings, and articles of virtù; the Old Palace; and the Museo Nazionale, erected in 1586 as cavalry-barracks, made over to the university in 1615, but afterwards converted into a great national museum, unrivalled in its collection of antiquities, consisting of gems, bronzes, vases, etc., chiefly obtained from Pompeii and Herculaneum. The Museo contains the famous Pompeian frescoes, a general gallery of sculptures, collection of engravings, the Herculaneum papyri, a picture-gallery with masterpieces of Italian and Spanish art, the royal library, with nearly 400,000 volumes, etc. There are numerous theatres, of which that of San Carlo (founded in 1737) is remarkable for its magnificence and is one of the largest opera-houses in the kingdom. Among the interesting relics of the city's past, in addition to the buildings already mentioned, are the Porta Capuana (one of the old gates), the Castello Nuovo, S. of the Piazza del Municipio, and facing the military harbor, and several palaces. The city is embellished with fountains and sculptural monuments. Naples is the seat of an archbishop. At the head of the institutions of learning is the university, founded in 1224, which has an attendance of more than 5000 students. The city possesses a royal school of engineers, veterinary college, military school, royal institute for oriental studies, various medical schools, more or less in association with the university, and schools of design, music, etc. Among the literary and scientific institutions are a society of arts, sciences, and antiquities (Royal Society), an observatory, a botanical garden, one of the richest in Italy, the zoological station already noticed, an agricultural society, physical, chemical, and mineralogical cabinets, and several public libraries.

The benevolent endowments include several large hospitals, among which may be named the hospital for incurables and the Annunziata, the latter partly for foundlings; the Reclusoria (or Albergo dei Poveri), an orphan asylum, or house of refuge, on a very extensive scale; and a Monte di Pietà, or public loan establishment. An aqueduct, completed in 1885, supplies the city with excellent water. Street railways traverse the city and extend into the country in all directions.

The manufactures of Naples include a great variety of articles. Among those of leading importance are macaroni and vermicelli, constituting the principal food of the great body of the people. Other leading articles are silks, cotton and woollen goods and other textiles, fire-arms, porcelain, majolica-wares, articles in terra-cotta, tobacco, chemical products, perfumes, lace, gloves, soap, carriages, violins and other musical instruments, hats, boots and shoes, etc. There are also extensive machinery plants, large shipbuilding works, foundries, blast-furnaces, glass-works, and type-foundries. Naples is the second seaport of Italy, Genoa ranking first. About 6000 steamers and sailing vessels enter the port annually. There is steam communication with America, Asia, Africa, and Australia. A great portion of the Italian emigrants sail from this port. Several long moles project into the bay.

Naples (Neapolis,—i.e., the "New City") was founded as a colony of the Greek city of Cumæ (in Campania) by the side of an older colony called Parthenope, which came to be known as Palæopolis (i.e., the "Old City"). The Romans established their dominion here at the beginning of the third century B.C. Under the Romans Neapolis flourished, retaining the character of a Greek city. It was a luxurious retreat for the wealthy Romans. After the fall of the Roman Empire Naples was for a short time under the rule of the Ostrogoths, from whom it was wrested by the Greeks (Byzantines) about the middle of the sixth century. It became the capital of a Greek duchy, which existed for several centuries. This duchy was swallowed up in the course of the eleventh and twelfth centuries by the Norman conquerors of southern Italy and Sicily. The city was afterwards the capital of the kingdom of Naples and of the realm of the Two Sicilies. The kingdom of Naples comprised all Italy S. of the Papal States. (See SICILIES, THE TWO). Among the numerous objects of interest in the vicinity are Vesuvius, Pompeii, Herculaneum, the Phlegræan Fields, Baia (Baiæ), Pozzuoli, Camaldoli, Castellammare, Sorrento, and the islands of Capri and Ischia at the entrance to its bay. Pop. in 1901, 563,540; inclusive of suburbs, about 700,000.

Natal, nạ-tăl', a colonial possession of Great Britain on the SE. coast of Africa, adjoining Cape Colony on the SW. and the Orange River and Transvaal colonies on the NW. On the SW. it borders on Basutoland, Griqualand East, and Pondoland. The Drakenberg mountains are on the W. border. Until recently the Buffalo and Tugela rivers formed the NE. boundary, but within the last few years Zululand (with Tongaland or Amatongaland) and a large tract formerly belonging to the Transvaal Republic have been annexed to Natal, which thus extends northeastward to the borders of Portuguese East Africa and Swaziland. Total area, about 34,600 sq. m. Pop. estimated in 1904 at 1,109,000, of whom about four-fifths were Zulu-Kaffirs. The Europeans number between 75,000 and 100,000, and the East Indians and other Asiatics together are about equally numerous. The level of the country rises in successive terraces from the sea to the highlands of the Drakenberg range. The surface is well watered and a great part of it is covered with tall grass. The climate is subtropical but healthful, the products on the low-lying coast being those of the tropics, while those of the cool highlands of the interior are such as are grown in temperate climes. Timber in the interior of Natal proper grows only in clumps, but Zululand possesses valuable forests. The sea-coast is bordered by a belt of mangroves. Cotton and indigo grow wild. Sugar, coffee, wheat, oats, beans, and tobacco are important crops. Tea-planting has been recently introduced. There are extensive deposits of coal, the product of the mines in 1902 having been 592,821 tons. The chief exports of the colony are gold, coal, wool, sugar, hides and skins, and bark. The only good harbor is that of Durban (or Port Natal). The colony is administered by a governor, assisted by a ministry, a legislative council, and a legislative assembly. Vasco de Gama landed at Port Natal in 1497, on Christmas Day, whence the name "Natal" (Nativity). The Boers of Cape Colony, who had emigrated in order not to have to endure British rule, organized the Republic of Natal in 1839, but in 1843 the British annexed the country to Cape Colony. Natal was erected into a separate colony in 1856, and had annexed to it the province of Zululand in 1897, and the Transvaal districts of Vryheid and Utrecht and part of Wakkerstroom in Jan., 1903. Navarre, nạ-vaʀ′ (Sp. Navarra, nä-vaʀ′rä), a province of Spain, bounded by France, Aragon, Old Castile, and the Basque Provinces. Area, 4055 sq. m. Pop. in 1900, 307,669. It is traversed by the Pyrenees, whose summits are generally bare, but whose lower slopes are covered with wood and afford excellent pasturage. Chief river, the Ebro, whose valley is very fruitful. There are extensive unproductive districts. About half of the population speak the Basque language. Capital, Pamplona. Navarre, which was never completely subjugated by the Arabs, appears as an independent kingdom about the beginning of the tenth century. In 1035 Aragon was detached from it, becoming a separate kingdom. It was united with Aragon from 1076 to 1134. From 1234 to 1328 Navarre was united with Champagne, the king of France ruling it during the latter part of this period. Towards the close of the fifteenth century Béarn was united with it. The bulk of the kingdom was seized by Ferdinand the Catholic in 1512 and united to Spain. The part N. of the Pyrenees (Béarn and Lower Navarre) continued to exist as a petty kingdom. In 1548 Jeanne d'Albret, queen of Navarre, married Antoine de Bourbon. Their son, Henry of Navarre, became king of France, as Henry IV., in 1589.

Nebraska, a river of North America. See PLATTE.

Nebraska, a northwest-central state of the American Union, bounded N. by South Dakota, E. by Iowa and Missouri, S. by Kansas and Colorado, and W. by Colorado and Wyoming. Area, 76,840 sq. m. Its N. line is formed by the 43d parallel of N. lat. and the Missouri River, which stream also washes its whole eastern border. The southern line strikes westward along the parallel of 40° N. to the meridian of 102° W. lon., and beyond that follows the parallel of 41° N. lat. to the meridian of 104° W. lon., which is the western limit of the state.

Face of the Country.—The greater part of Nebraska is a gently undulating, monotonous plain or prairie, rising progressively towards the W., where the foot-hills of the Rocky Mountains are reached. The state is but scantily supplied with timber. The interesting Mauvaises Terres (or Bad Lands) occupy but a relatively small area in Nebraska, being situated in the NW., in a basin whose surface is carved out into fantastic cliffs and buttes, with narrow labyrinthine passages between. This strange and desolate tract abounds in interesting fossil remains. Eastward of this region, and S. of the Niobrara, there is a tract covered with sand-hills, but capable of affording pasturage in the proper season. The western part of the state attains a considerable elevation, generally from 2500 to 3000 ft. or more, and in Gabe Rock, in Banner co., reaches 5006 ft., and in Niobrara Summit, 5323 ft. In the upper Niobrara valley there is some forest-land, with yellow-pine timber, while elsewhere, especially eastward, the water-courses are fringed with cottonwood, hackberry, boxelder, elm, walnut, chicot, ash, oak, and other trees. Berry-bearing shrubs, wild grape-vines, and the wild plum are abundant.

Rivers.—Besides the Missouri, the principal rivers are the Niobrara, the broad and shallow Platte, with its North and South Forks, the North, Middle, and South Loup, the Elkhorn, Lodge Pole Creek, the Republican, the Saline, and the Big and Little Blue rivers. Owing to their shallowness and lack of water the streams are not navigated except the Missouri.

Geology.—Southeastern Nebraska is underlaid by the coal-measures, but its coals are mostly "pinched out," and lie in very thin layers, which cannot be worked to advantage. They have, nevertheless, afforded a scanty supply of fuel of a tolerable quality. Peat is abundant and there are workable beds of lignite or brown coal. A large part of eastern Nebraska is covered by Cretaceous strata and of the western section by Tertiary (largely Miocene and Pliocene) deposits; and along the Missouri there are bluffs of the loess. The glacial drift deposits are extensively distributed. There are many richly fossiliferous strata in the state, largely in areas of a comparatively recent lacustrine formation. Good limestone, sandstone, and gypsum exist in abundance and afford building-materials. Fictile and other clays are common. There are numerous salines in the state, some of which already afford a good supply of salt, mainly obtained by evaporating the brines.

Climate.—The climate of the state is of a markedly continental type, with extremes of summer and winter temperature, the range of the mercury being between about —40° and 115° (in the shade). The mean January temperature is 20°. The rainfall is very unequal, ranging from 30 inches, or even considerably more, in the eastern sections to less than 15 inches in the W., where irrigation is made a necessary condition of successful agriculture. The average annual rainfall for the state is about 23 inches.

Agricultural Resources, etc.—Nebraska occupies a prominent place as an agricultural state. The eastern counties have everywhere a deep and fertile soil, naturally covered with a tough sod. The blue-joint of the uplands and the tule grass of the bottoms are excellent wild pasture- and hay-grasses. Those lands which are broken by "draws," or ravines, are especially prized by the grazier, because they almost always afford water, while in winter the draws shelter the stock from the severe winds. Droughts are frequent in the W. Indian corn, spring wheat, rye, oats, barley, potatoes, butter, sorghum, tobacco, and wool are leading products. The product of the crops for 1900 was: corn, 210,430,064 bushels; wheat, 48,801,900 bushels; oats, 37,778,572 bushels; barley, 587,382 bushels; rye, 867,237 bushels; potatoes, 9,664,446 bushels; and hay, 2,639,489 tons. The wool-clip yielded 2,448,462 pounds of washed and unwashed wool. The cultivation of the sugar-beet has developed into a considerable industry, as likewise that of orchard-fruits. Stock-raising is extensively carried on. The live-stock, in addition to cattle and horses, includes large numbers of swine. Cattle do not require much protection or much hand-feeding in winter and often receive none at all.

Manufactures have greatly increased, but are carried on chiefly, as yet, for the supply of local needs. Among the articles produced may be specified farm-implements, wagons, cars, boots, shoes, lumber, cooperage, furniture, bricks, tiles, salt, lime, flour, meal, syrup, harness, soap, candles, tobacco, cigars, metallic wares, etc. Smelting and meat-packing (chiefly of hogs), brewing, and the manufacture of grist-mill and dairy products (butter, cheese) are among the notable industries of the state.

Railroads.—In 1865 the first railroad trains were run in the state and there were reported 122 miles of track. In 1870 there were 705 miles; in 1880, 1953 miles; in 1890, 5407 miles; and in 1900, 5700 miles. Omaha is the principal railroad centre.

The Counties are 90 in number,—viz., Adams, Antelope, Banner, Blaine, Boone, Boxbutte, Boyd, Brown, Buffalo, Burt, Butler, Cass, Ceda, Chase, Cherry, Cheyenne, Clay, Colfax, Cuming, Custer, Dakota, Dawes, Dawson, Deuel, Dixon, Dodge, Douglas, Dundy, Fillmore, Franklin, Frontier, Furnas, Gage, Garfield, Gosper, Grant, Greeley, Hall, Hamilton, Harlan, Hayes, Hitchcock, Holt, Hooker, Howard, Jefferson, Johnson, Kearney, Keith, Keyapaha, Kimball, Knox, Lancaster, Lincoln, Logan, Loup, McPherson, Madison, Merrick, Nance, Nemaha, Nuckolls, Otoe, Pawnee, Perkins, Phelps, Pierce, Platte, Polk, Redwillow, Richardson, Rock, Saline, Sarpy, Saunders, Scotts Bluff, Seward, Sheridan, Sherman, Sioux, Stanton, Thayer, Thomas, Thurston, Valley, Washington, Wayne, Webster, Wheeler, York.

The principal towns are Omaha, on the Missouri, the railroad centre and metropolis of the state (pop. in 1900, 102,555), Lincoln, the capital (40,169), South Omaha (26,001), Beatrice (7875), Nebraska City (7380), Grand Island (7554), Fremont (7241), Hastings (7188), etc.

Education.—Lincoln is the seat of the state university, the University of Nebraska, with which the state agricultural college and the school of fine arts are affiliated. The number of enrolled students in 1903–04 was 2513. Other institutions are the University of Omaha, at Bellevue; Cotner College, at Bethany; Doane College, at Crete; and Nebraska Wesleyan University at University Place. The state has a normal school at Peru. There is a state penitentiary at Lincoln, an asylum for the blind at Nebraska City, an asylum for the insane at Lincoln, a school for deaf-mutes at Omaha, an industrial school at Kearney, a girls' industrial school at Geneva, etc.

Government.—The governor and the chief state officers are elected for terms of 2 years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives, the members of both serving for 2 years. The state sends 6 members to the lower house of Congress.

The population in 1860 was 28,841, at which time the territory had an area vastly greater than the present state; in 1870, 122,993, including but very few of the 7528 Indians; in 1880, 452,402; in 1890, 1,058,910, with 3751 Indians on reservations; in 1900, 1,068,539. The foreign-born population in 1900 was 177,347.

History.—Nebraska formed successively a part of the Louisiana and Missouri territories until 1854, when the Missouri Compromise was repealed and the famous Kansas-Nebraska Bill, creating territorial governments, was passed by Congress. The general interest in the political destinies of Kansas for some years drew the stream of immigrants to that quarter rather than to Nebraska, which was not admitted as a state until 1867. Since that time the progress in wealth and population has been remarkable.

Nepal, or Nepaul, ne-pawl′ (Hindu, Nepala, nå-på′-lå), an independent country of India, situated in the Himalayas, on their S. slope, between lat. 26° 30′ and 30° 30′ N. and lon. 80° and 88° E., having S. and W. Bengal and the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, E. Sikkim and the Darjiling district (Bengal), and N. Tibet. Length, from W. to E., 450 miles; average breadth, about 120 miles. Area, estimated at about 54,000 sq. m. Nepal contains some of the highest mountains in the world. Mounts Everest (29,002 feet) and Kunchinjunga (28,156 ft.) are in the NE. corner and Dhawalaghiri (26,826 ft.) is near the centre. Nearly the whole region consists of a succession of lofty mountains and narrow valleys, in which many affluents of the Gogra, Gunduk, Kusi, and other tributaries of the Ganges, which drain the whole of Nepal, have their sources. Along the base of the Himalayas stretches an undulating and in part densely wooded tract called the terai. Rice, maize, wheat, barley, cotton, sugar-cane, tea, and tobacco are among the chief crops. Fruits, drugs, and dyeing-materials are important products and timber is abundant. An immense amount of labor is expended upon the terracing of hillsides and irrigation. The native animals comprise horses, large dogs, shawl goats (which yield the Cashmere wool), and sheep. Copper, iron, and lead are among the mineral products, but the mining-industry is on a small scale. The manufactures include textiles, metallic goods, paper (from bark), and pottery. Among the exports are rice and other grains, timber, hides, oil-seeds, tobacco, cattle, and spices. The exports to British India in recent years have amounted to $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 annually. The population consists of several tribes, Mongol, Tibetan, and Aryan elements being represented, probably underlaid by aboriginal (Dravidian?) elements. The dominant tribe is that of the Gurkhas, a martial race, recent immigrants from Rajputana, who are Hindus in faith, as are the bulk of the Nepalese. There are many adherents of Buddhism. The population of Nepal is estimated at 3,000,000–4,000,000. The country is ruled by a monarch called Maharajah. The governing power is the prime minister. There is a large standing army. Capital, Khatmandu. The British waged a successful war against the Gurkhas in 1814–15, since which time the tribe has been on friendly terms and has tolerated the presence of a British resident at the capital.

Netherlands, nĕтн'ẹr-lạndz, or the Low Countries (Dutch, Nederlanden, nā'dẹr-lăn'dẹn; Fr. Pays-Bas, pā'ee' bā; Ger. Niederlande, nee'dẹr-lăn'dẹh), formerly a country in the W. part of Europe, comprising the present kingdoms of the Netherlands and of Belgium. The surface of a large portion of the region is a dead level, and much of it lies actually below the level of the sea. (See next article, also Belgium.) At the time when the Romans established their dominion in this region, in the first century B.C., the bulk of it was inhabited by the Batavi (in the Rhine-Meuse delta), Frisians, and other Germanic tribes, and the SW. portion was peopled by Belgian Gauls. By about 400 A.D. the S. portion had become subject to the Franks, while the Frisians retained their independence until in the course of the eighth century they likewise succumbed to the Frankish power. At this time Christianity was introduced among them. After the disruption of the Frankish realm the greater part of the country was included in the kingdom of Germany (or, from 962, in the Holy Roman Empire, as the dominions of the king of Germany came to be known), the SW. corner forming part of the realm of the Western Franks. As a result of the feudal system a number of principalities arose,—Flanders, Brabant (the title of Duke of Brabant supplanted that of Duke of Lower Lorraine), Artois, Hainaut, Holland, Zealand, Gelderland, Luxemburg, etc. The bishoprics of Utrecht and Liège became important ecclesiastical principalities. The cities of Flanders, Brabant, and Holland grew flourishing by trade and manufactures, and some of them finally attained virtually the position of independent republics. In the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries Bruges, Ghent, and Antwerp especially rose to great power and splendor, and these and other cities of the Netherlands played an important rôle in the renaissance of the arts. Between 1384 and 1443 the dukes of Burgundy acquired possession of Flanders, Artois, Namur, Brabant, Limburg, Hainaut, Holland, Zealand, and Luxemburg. Thus arose the powerful but short-lived Burgundian realm, for a time the most opulent in Europe. By the marriage in 1477 of Mary, heiress of Charles the Bold of Burgundy, with Maximilian of Austria, the fortunes of the Netherlands were united with those of the house of Hapsburg. The marriage of their son Philip with Joan, daughter of Ferdinand and Isabella, brought about the union of the Netherlands with Spain, which was effected in 1516, when Charles (the future emperor, Charles V.) ascended the Spanish throne on the death of Ferdinand. The efforts of Philip II., the son of Charles V., to extirpate Protestantism brought about a revolt from Spain in 1568. The Union of Utrecht, effected in 1579 by William of Orange between the provinces of Holland, Zealand, Friesland, Utrecht, Overyssel, Gelderland, and Groningen, laid the foundations of the Dutch Republic. The struggle continued with slight intermission until the Peace of Westphalia, in 1648, when Spain finally recognized the independence of the Dutch who were under the rule of the House of Orange. It was not until now that the connection of the Dutch Netherlands with the Holy Roman Empire was formally declared severed. Spain retained possession of the Belgian Netherlands. Louis XIV. of France wrested part of Flanders (French Flanders) from Spain in 1667–78. Spain was compelled, in 1713–14, to cede the Netherlands to Austria, whose rule came to an end in 1794. For subsequent history, see BELGIUM and the article on the kingdom of the NETHERLANDS.

Netherlands, called also Holland, a maritime kingdom on the western border of continental Europe, lying between lat. 50° 45′ and 53° 32′ N. and lon. 3° 25′ and 7° 12′ E. On the W. and N. it is bounded by the North Sea, on the E. by Prussia, and on the S. by Belgium. The greatest extent from N. to S. is about 190 miles, with a breadth from W. to E. of 120 miles. Area, 12,650 sq. m. (exclusive of the large area that is covered by the Zuider Zee).

Surface Characters.—The Netherlands (or Low Countries, as the name implies) form the most characteristic portion of the great plain of northwestern Europe. From the middle of Belgium the country NE. becomes an almost dead level, extending in monotonous sandy flats, with little interruption, through Prussia into Russia. The lowest part of this immense level is the country between the mouths of the Scheldt and Ems, the region comprised in the Netherlands; within this distance the Rhine, Meuse (or Maas), Yssel, and other rivers, enter the sea through a number of arms and sluggish winding channels, the border land of which is in great part depressed below sea-level. It is estimated that nearly a fourth of the land area occupies a position extending from sea-level to 8 feet below it and one-eighth from sea-level to 3 ft. above; so that were it not for the protection afforded by dikes and artificial embankments, nearly 40 per cent. of the surface would be subject to domination by the sea. The lowest-lying lands fall to 12–15 ft. below the oceanic surface. A long line of sand-dunes, rising to 30–100 ft. and more, extends along the ocean front and is in part paralleled by lines of dunes in the interior. The central, eastern, and northern sections of the country occupy general elevations of from 10 to 35–50 ft., with gravel- and sand-hills rising to 150–350 ft. The latter are largely of morainic or drift origin. In the region of the older rocks, SE. of Limburg, a maximum elevation of 1050 ft. is attained.

Polders, Dikes.—The soil of the Netherlands shows almost everywhere the proofs of a struggle between the ocean and the river, in the alternation of salt- and fresh-water deposits. Remains of forests now lie buried under the waves of the North Sea; paved roads, traces of villages and of cultivation, are found beneath the morasses of the interior. The major portion of the country is divided by dikes, some of them 60 feet high, which protect portions of land from the sea, lakes, or rivers. These enclosed lands, usually of extreme fertility, are called polders. On the chief dikes are roads and canals; the latter join the rivers and are generally large enough to be navigable. The work of reclaiming the waste is constantly going forward, and it may be said that more than one-third of the cultivable area of the land is represented by polder reclamation. Among the most noted of the polders are those of Haarlem, covering an area of 72 sq. m. (reclaimed 1840–53), of the Y, of Beemster (1608–12), Schermer, and Purmer. The project of converting the Zuider Zee into a vast polder and interior lagoon, one of the most important of modern engineering works, is now in course of execution.

Estuaries and Bays.—Among the more striking features of the Netherlands are the wide estuaries of the Scheldt and of the Maas, which latter bear off also the waters of the Rhine and the Zuider Zee, which was formed by an irruption of the sea in the thirteenth century and which in its fullest extent covered 1400 sq. m. Among the islands in the Scheldt-Maas-Rhine delta are Walcheren, South Beveland, North Beveland, Tholen, Schouwen, Goeree-en-Overflakkee (until recently two islands), and Voorne-en-Putten (formerly two islands). Between the mouths of the Maas and the entrance to the Zuider Zee the coast is chiefly formed of sand-hills or dunes, separating the low fertile meadows from the ocean. In a line with these dunes, beyond the entrance of the Zuider Zee runs a chain of islands—Texel, Vlieland, Terschelling, Ameland, etc.—which mark the original line of coast. The coast of Friesland, opposite to these islands, depends for its security altogether on artificial embankments. The Lauwer Zee, a deep bay on the confines of Friesland and Groningen, owes its origin to an irruption of the ocean, as does likewise the Dollart, a gulf at the mouth of the Ems, on the borders of Hanover, whose formation is said to have swept away 70 villages and 100,000 people.

Rivers and Canals.—The chief rivers of the Netherlands are the Rhine, Maas, Scheldt, Yssel, Vecht, and Hunse. The Rhine after entering the Netherlands soon divides, the S. and principal arm, which takes the name of Waal, uniting with the Maas, while the N. arm, which communicates with the Yssel, proceeds parallel with the Waal under the name of Lek. A branch from the latter, named the Kromme Rijn (Crooked Rhine), winds by Utrecht to the Zuider Zee, while another very diminished stream, called the Old Rhine, flows from Utrecht by Leyden to the sea at Katwijk. Of the Scheldt, only the estuaries, the E. and the W. (Old) Scheldt, are within the Dutch boundary. The Yssel and Vecht, flowing from Germany, both enter the Zuider Zee at no great distance asunder. The Hunse, rising in the Bourtanger Moor, flows through Groningen to the Lauwer Zee. (See RHINE, SCHELDT, etc.) The canals of the Netherlands are numerous and important, the principal being the North Sea Canal (15 miles in length and accommodating the largest ocean steamers), running W. from Amsterdam to the sea; the North Holland Canal (constructed in 1819–25, 130 feet broad and 16 feet deep) for ships passing between Amsterdam and the Helder, a distance of 46 miles; the Winschoten Canal, 18 miles long, connecting the Dollart with Groningen; the Willems Canal, in North Brabant; and the Damster Diep, extending from Groningen to the sea at Delfzijl. The Nieuwer Sluis unites Utrecht with Amsterdam, while the latter city communicates with Rotterdam by a canal which touches at Haarlem, Leyden, and Delft, passing also near the Hague.

Climate.—The climate of the Netherlands is humid and changeable; violent winds are frequent, and heavy sea-fogs are driven in, which injure vegetation. The winters and summers are both tempered by proximity to the sea. At Utrecht (lat. 52° 5′ N.) the average annual temperature is about 50°, the mean temperature of winter being 34.5° and of summer 66°. The average annual rainfall is only about 28 inches, but rain falls during about 200 days of the year. Low fevers visit the marshy districts in autumn.

Rural Industry.—Gardening and agriculture have attained in this naturally unproductive country a high degree of perfection. The agricultural and grazing lands together make up nearly two-thirds of the entire area of the country. About 20 per cent. of the surface is still waste-land, while 7–8 per cent. is woodland. Wheat of excellent quality is grown in some portions of the southern provinces. Rye, oats, potatoes, beans, and peas are among the leading crops. The cultivation of the sugar-beet is an important industry and large quantities of flax are produced. The cultivation of tobacco is carried on, but has declined; that of madder, formerly important, has nearly ceased. Culinary vegetables are raised, not merely for supplying the internal demand, but also for the exportation of the seeds. It is in live-stock and dairy-produce, however, that the rural industry of the Netherlands shows its strength. The Dutch horses are remarkable for size and strength, and the excellence of the Dutch horned cattle is almost unrivalled. The total number of cattle in the country in 1900 was about 1,650,000; of horses, 300,000; of sheep, 770,000; and of pigs, 1,370,000. Immense quantities of butter and cheese are marketed. The poultry-yard, as well as every object of husbandry which demands care, is to the Dutch farmer a source of wealth. Bee-culture is actively carried on. The mineral resources of the Netherlands are wholly unimportant and are limited to deposits of coal (in Limburg), iron-ores, clays, and building-stones.

Fisheries, Manufacturing Industries, Commerce.—Living along the estuaries of great rivers and on the shores of a sea abounding in fish, the Dutch early became a seafaring people. The number of vessels belonging to the merchant navy in 1901 was 417 sailing vessels and 235 steamers. In the same year 5851 vessels of all kinds were engaged in the fisheries, the product of the herring-fishery alone being valued at 7,390,345 guilders. The oyster product is very large. Manufactures have flourished in a remarkable degree, though never a predominating interest. The linen and paper of the Netherlands have long held a high rank. The manufacture of woollen cloth centres in Leyden, Gouda, and Utrecht, which last-named place is famous also for its silk velvet. The distilleries of Schiedam are well known. Other leading industries are found in the preparation of leather, sugar-refining, and the manufacture of chemicals and tobacco-pipes. The absence of coal and the prevalence of strong winds cause windmills to be extensively employed as a motive-power in all kinds of work. The Netherlands belong to the leading trading countries of the world. The value of the imports for home consumption in 1902 was 2,172,000,000 guilders or florins (about $800,000,000) and that of the exports of domestic products 1,828,000,000 guilders (about $730,000,000). The foreign trade is mainly with Germany, Great Britain, Belgium, the Dutch East Indies, the United States, and Russia. The bulk of the commerce by sea is carried on through Rotterdam, Amsterdam, and Flushing. Rotterdam is one of the principal seaports of continental Europe. The length of railroads operated in 1901 was 1730 miles.

Colonies.—The Netherlands possess a wide extent of colonies and dependencies in Asia and America, with which an extensive commerce is carried on, contributing materially to the greatness of the kingdom. They are the Dutch East Indies (or Netherlands Indies—separately noticed), the West Indian islands of Curaçao, Buen Ayre, St. Eustatius, etc., and the South American colony of Dutch Guiana (or Surinam).

Government, Population.—The kingdom of the Netherlands is an hereditary constitutional monarchy. The legislative power is vested in the States-General (or parliament), which consists of an upper and a lower chamber, respectively of 50 and 100 members. The members of the upper chamber are elected by the provincial legislatures, their term being 9 years; those of the lower chamber are chosen by direct suffrage, their term being 4 years. The suffrage is very much restricted by property qualifications. The seat of government is at The Hague.

The kingdom is divided into 11 provinces, which with their areas and populations, according to the census of Dec. 31, 1899, are as follows:

Provinces.	Area in sq. m.	Pop. in 1899.
North Brabant	1,980	553,842
Gelderland	1,965	566,549
South Holland	1,166	1,144,448
North Holland	1,070	968,131
Zealand	690	216,295
Utrecht	534	251,034
Friesland	1,282	340,262
Overyssel	1,291	333,338
Groningen	790	299,602
Drenthe	1,030	148,544
Limburg	850	281,934
Total	12,648	5,104,137

The following 8 cities had a population of more than 50,000 at the close of 1902:

Amsterdam	538,800	Groningen	69,500
Rotterdam	348,500	Haarlem	68,000
The Hague	222,500	Arnhem	59,000
Utrecht	108,500	Leyden	55,000

About three-fifths of the inhabitants of the Netherlands are Protestants and about nine-tenths of the remainder Roman Catholics. At the close of 1899 there were 2,471,000 persons belonging to the Dutch Reformed Church, 598,000 other Protestants, 1,790,000 Roman Catholics, and 104,000 Jews. The sect of Jansenists numbers about 9000. All religious sects and persuasions are politically on a perfectly equal footing. There are 4 universities in the Netherlands, at Leyden, Utrecht, Groningen, and Amsterdam. The Dutch language is related to the Platt-Deutsch of northwestern Germany and is nearly identical with the Flemish. The Dutch literature is very rich and extensive, and in the history of the fine arts, especially painting, the people of the Netherlands occupy a prominent place.

History.—(For the history prior to 1579 see the preceding article.) In 1579 the people of the northern Netherlands, united in the defence of their liberties against Spain, laid the foundations of the Dutch Republic by the Union of Utrecht, into which 7 states entered,—namely, Holland, Zealand, Utrecht, Gelderland, Overyssel, Groningen, and Friesland. Under the leadership of William of Orange (assassinated 1584) and his son, Maurice of Nassau (died 1625), the Dutch achieved their independence, which was recognized by Spain in 1648. Their country constituted a federal republic, which was ruled by stadt-holders of the House of Orange. At the end of the sixteenth century the Dutch gained possession of the Molucca Islands and secured a monopoly of the spice-trade. At this time they supplanted the Portuguese in Java, of which they gradually made themselves masters in the course of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Early in the seventeenth century the Dutch West India Company established settlements in Surinam (Guiana) and New Netherland. About the middle of the century they ousted the Portuguese from Ceylon and began colonizing the region about the Cape of Good Hope. At this time, when they owned more shipping than any other nation of Europe, they waged fierce wars with the English, in which for a moment they triumphed. In 1664 the English took New Netherland from them. From 1689 to 1702 Holland and England were united under one sovereign, William III. In the course of the eighteenth century the Dutch lost their commercial pre-eminence. In 1794–95 their country was conquered by the French, who established the Batavian Republic. In 1806 the kingdom of Holland was constituted for Louis Bonaparte, brother of Napoleon. In 1810 his realm was incorporated with the French Empire. In the mean time the commerce of Holland was nearly annihilated and the Dutch colonial possessions were seized by the British. The French were expelled at the close of 1813. In 1815 the Congress of Vienna united Holland and Belgium into a single realm, the kingdom of the Netherlands, for the House of Orange. By the acts of the congress England was allowed to retain Cape Colony, Ceylon, and a large part of the Dutch possessions in Guiana. Luxemburg was erected into a grand-duchy for the king of the Netherlands (to continue part of the Germanic body). In 1830 a revolt took place in Belgium, whose inhabitants had never willingly submitted to the sway of their Dutch neighbors. The French came to the assistance of Belgium and in 1832 the liberation of the country was achieved. A final settlement between the Netherlands and Belgium was effected in 1839, Limburg and Luxemburg being divided between the sovereigns of the two countries. The dynastic connection between the Netherlands and the grand-duchy of Luxemburg was severed in 1890.

Neva (Russ. pron. nà-vå'), a river of Russia, government of St. Petersburg, connecting Lake Ladoga with the Gulf of Finland, into which it discharges by several arms, by which a number of islands (within St. Petersburg) are formed. Length, 40 miles, from Schlüsselburg, on Lake Ladoga, to St. Petersburg. Breadth, between 800 and 2000 feet (exceptionally much broader); depth in the channel, about 50 feet. It is the great medium of communication between the interior parts of northern Russia and the sea, though usually frozen up from the middle of November to near the end of April. A system of canals and natural waters maintains communication between it and the Caspian and White seas.

Neva, a post-station of Anderson co., S.C.

Nevada, ne-vå'dạ (Sp. "snow-clad"), one of the western states of the American Union, bounded N. by Oregon and Idaho, E. by Utah and Arizona, SW. and W. by California. The northern border of the state is in lat. 42° N.; the eastern limit is, for the most part, the meridian of 114° W. lon.; and southward for more than 200 miles from the NW. angle of the state the boundary lies close to the meridian of 120° W. Excepting small areas in the N., which are drained by affluents of the Columbia, and a small section in the S., whence the water flows into the Colorado River, all the state belongs to the so-called Great Basin (or Fremont Basin), a region whose scanty waters do not flow to the sea. At the extreme SE. the Colorado River for some distance separates Nevada from Arizona. Area of the land-surface, 109,740 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—The "Great Basin" is in reality a series of long, narrow basins, running N. and S., and separated from one another by rugged, steep, and, in some cases, lofty mountains. Such are the East Humboldt Mountains, the Goshute, Ungoweah, White Pine, Piñon, Toyabe, Humboldt, Santa Rosa, Quinn's River, Lookout, Trinity, Antelope, Rabbit Hole, Pancake, Pine Nut, Desert, Opal, Spring, Las Vegas, Quartz, Sedave, Toano, Diamond, Pequop, Granite, Shell Creek, Torsarr, and other ranges, mostly short, and in many cases traversed by deep and convenient passes, while the intermediate valleys are frequently broad deserts, where grow the grease-wood and sage-brush and other scanty herbage; in other cases they are narrow cañons, or, again, they are the basins of shallow lakes, fed by the mountain-snows. (See Great Basin). The general elevation of the surface is 4000 feet or more above sea-level. Wheeler Peak, near the eastern boundary, attains an altitude of 13,058 feet. Poston Mount attains an altitude of 11,977 ft. Other elevations are Toyabe Dome, 11,779 ft.; Mount Silliman, 11,623 ft.; Davies Mountain, 11,656 ft.; and White Pine Mountain, 11,277 ft.

Hydrography.—Dividing diagonally the mountain-ranges and valleys sweeps the small river Humboldt in a general SW. course for some 375 miles. It is remarkable as furnishing the only E. and W. valley in the state available for the passage of a railway, and this valley determines the course of one of the transcontinental lines of railroad. This river is also remarkable for its alkaline waters. All the streams of the state are small, and, excepting the Bruner, Owyhee, etc., in the N., which flow into the Snake River northward, and the Virgin, Beaver Dam, Muddy, and Vegas rivers in the S., which are tributaries of the Colorado, all the rivers of Nevada end in lakes or "sinks," the latter being marshy spots in the desert sands. Such rivers are the Walker, Carson, and Truckee, the last-named flowing from Lake Tahoe into Pyramid Lake. Most of the lakes are either alkaline or saline, and some are composed of highly complex and even caustic solutions, but a few are salt. Of the fresh lakes many are shallow and overgrown with the tule, or reed (Scirpus validus). The chief lacustrine waters are those of Pyramid, Winnemucca, Humboldt, Walker, and Carson lakes, which in part occupy the position of a vast outflowing lake of the Quaternary period and known to geologists as Lake Lahontan. The beautiful Lake Tahoe, with a depth of 1500 feet, whose surface is elevated 6700 feet, is on the California boundary.

Climate.—The climate of the state is dry and healthful, with summer and winter temperatures well accentuated (maximum, about 115°; minimum, —30° to —35°). Violent winds are rare, and there is but little snow in the non-mountainous regions. The average annual rainfall for most parts is 10 inches or less.

Agricultural and Pastoral Resources, Vegetation, etc.—It is its scanty rainfall, rather than poverty of soil, that gives Nevada the reputation of being a desert, for, in cases where irrigation is practicable, even the alkaline plains in many instances have proved very productive. In the better-settled districts considerable quantities of spring wheat, barley, oats, potatoes, butter, wool, garden vegetables, etc., are produced. Much hay is cut upon the marshy river-bottoms and in some of the upland valleys, whose bottom-lands afford excellent blue-joint and red-top for hay, while the uplands and plains have excellent sand-grass and bunch-grass for grazing. The valued white sage (or "winter-fat") affords the best of winter pasturage. The most extensively irrigated sections of the state are in the western-central and Humboldt River regions. Somewhat less than 4 per cent. of the area of the state is included in farms. The product of the chief agricultural crops in 1900 was: wheat, 991,196 bushels; potatoes, 273,486 bushels; and hay, 375,022 tons. In spite of its sharp winter climate and its parched and arid soil, Nevada has proved a profitable region for the stock-raiser, horned cattle fattening readily without grain, so rich is the stunted herbage. The wool-clip in 1900 yielded 4,592,903 pounds of washed and unwashed wool. In the extreme S. cotton and subtropical fruits, like the orange, do very well. The flora of the state is of a very marked character. Timber trees are nowhere very abundant. The white pine (a fir, entirely distinct from the Eastern white pine) is extensively cut for timber, and the great advance of mining and smelting operations has already stripped many of the mountains of their scanty forest growth.

Geology, Minerals, etc.—Many of the geological ages, from the Eozoic to the Tertiary and Quaternary, are here represented, the outcrops of the older formations, chiefly Azoic and Cambrian (or Silurian), appearing in and upon the mountain-ranges. The main uplifting of the mountain-ranges appears to have been accomplished in the Jurassic period. Not a few evidences of comparatively recent volcanic action are present in almost every part of the state, besides which the strata are extensively disturbed by much more ancient dikes of plutonic rock.

For years Nevada was the leading state in the value of its metallic products, and in 1875 it yielded somewhat more of the precious metals than all the rest of North America. In that year the product (mainly silver) was valued at $40,478,369. The gold and silver product in 1900 was: gold, 113,681 fine ounces (valued at $2,350,000), and silver, 1,229,756 fine ounces (valued at $750,151). Under Virginia City and Gold Hill lies the famous Comstock Lode of silver- and gold-bearing quartz, once the most profitable mining deposit in the world. The recent discoveries in Nye (Tonopah) and Esmeralda (Goldfield) counties have largely increased the state's output of the precious metals. In 1903 the gold product was valued at $3,070,350; silver, $2,098,912. Copper, lead, quicksilver, and nickel are also found. There are extensive deposits of native sulphur, borax, soda, potash, rock salt, pyritic compounds, arsenical ores, marble, granite, alabaster, slate, and other valuable minerals. Lignitic and other forms of coal have been mined sparingly in the Elko River region and elsewhere. Mineral and thermal waters abound.

The milling and smelting of ores and the sawing of lumber are as yet the only important industries. Lumber-sawing has been largely carried on in the mountains, but has declined, owing to the swift consumption of all available timber. The Carson River and other mountain-streams furnish water-power.

Counties, Towns, Railroads.—Nevada is divided into 14 counties, as follows: Churchill, Douglas, Elko, Esmeralda, Eureka, Humboldt, Lander, Lincoln, Lyon, Nye, Ormsby, Storey, Washoe, and White Pine. The principal towns are Reno (pop. in 1900, 4500), Virginia City (2695), and Carson City, the capital (2100). Some towns which a few years since were thriving are now abandoned, on account of the failure of mining enterprises. In 1867 there were 30 miles of railroad in Nevada; in 1870, 593 miles; in 1880, 739 miles; in 1890, 923 miles; and in 1900, 1027 miles.

Constitution, etc.—The governor and state officers are chosen for 4 years. The legislature consists of a senate and an assembly. The members of the former are elected for 4 years and those of the latter for 2 years. The state sends 1 member to the lower house of Congress.

Education.—There are a few public high-schools. The state university (or University of Nevada), a coeducational institution with about 300 students, is located at Reno.

The Population in 1860 was 6857; in 1870, 42,491; in 1880, 62,266; in 1890, 45,761; in 1900, 42,335.

History.—The region included within the present state of Nevada was acquired by the United States from Mexico in 1848. Most of it was included in the territory of Utah as originally constituted. Nevada was organized as a territory in 1861 and admitted as a state into the Union in 1864. The present boundaries were established in 1866.

Nevada, a county in the SW. part of Arkansas. Area, 610 sq. m. It is bounded on the NE. by the Little Missouri River and drained by Cypress Bayou and Terre Rouge Creek. Capital, Prescott. Pop. in 1890, 14,832; in 1900, 16,609.

Nevada, a county of California, borders on the state of Nevada. Area, 972 sq. m. It is bounded on the NW. by the Middle Yuba River and is also drained by the South Yuba and Bear Creek. The Sierra Nevada traverses the eastern part of this county and presents grand mountain-scenery. Among its beautiful features is Donner Lake, a favorite summer-resort. Gold-mining and lumbering are important industries. Capital, Nevada City. Pop. in 1890, 17,369; in 1900, 17,789.

Nevada, a post-village of Livingston co., Ill., on the Chicago and Alton R., 81 miles SW. of Chicago.

Nevada, a post-village of Tipton co., Ind., on Wild Cat Creek, 32 miles SSE. of Logansport. Pop. 75.

Nevada, a banking city, capital of Story co., Iowa, on the Chicago and Northwestern R., 32 miles N. by E. of Des Moines. It has tile- and other works and ships live-stock. Pop. in 1900, 2472.

New Brunswick, a province of the Dominion of Canada, bounded on the N. by the province of Quebec, from which it is partly separated by the Restigouche River, and by the Bay of Chaleur, E. by the Gulf of St. Lawrence and Northumberland Strait, the latter separating it from Prince Edward Island, SE. (for a short distance) by Nova Scotia, S. by the Bay of Fundy, and on the W. by the state of Maine, from which it is partly separated by the St. Croix and St. John rivers, and by Quebec. It extends from lat. 45° 5′ (exclusive of Grand Manan Island) to 48° N. and from lon. 63° 50′ to 69° 8′ W. Area of the land-surface, 28,100 sq. m. Its coast-line is about 500 miles in length, interrupted at the point of junction with Nova Scotia, where an isthmus not more than 11 miles in breadth connects the two provinces and separates Northumberland Strait from the Bay of Fundy. The surface of the country is generally flat or undulating, in the form of a plain, with some hills skirting the Bay of Fundy and the rivers St. John and Restigouche. The highest summit is Bald Mountain, a granitic mass 2470 feet in elevation; Blue Mountain is 1600 feet high. The shores of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and Northumberland Strait abound in fine ship-harbors (each at the mouth of a considerable river), from which is exported much fine timber. For about 12 miles inland the country is low and skirted with marshes.

The face of the province is traversed in all directions by navigable rivers, chief of which is the St. John. Among the numerous bays with which the coast is indented are the Bay of Chaleur, on the N. coast, with many excellent harbors; on the E. Miramichi, Richibucto, Buctouche, Cocaigne, and Shediac; on the SW. Passamaquoddy Bay, on the borders of Maine; and on the S. St. John Harbor and Chignecto Bay (with Shepody Bay and Cumberland Basin).

The lakes are numerous, but of small extent. The principal is Grand Lake, 30 miles long.

Along the shores of the Bay of Chaleur and the Gulf of St. Lawrence gray sandstone and gray clay-slate predominate, with detached rocks of granite, quartz, and ironstone; on the S. coast, limestone, clay-slate, with sandstone, interrupted occasionally by gneiss, trap, and granite. Coal and iron-ore are abundant. The Albert Coal-Mine, at one time thought to contain some of the most valuable deposits of bituminous matter on the continent (the product, called Albertite), has been exhausted. Copper, antimony, nickel, and manganese are found, but the general mining industry has not been extensively developed.

The climate of New Brunswick is subject to great extremes of heat and cold, the range of temperature being from —20° to 95°. The prevailing summer winds are from the WSW. and S.; when from the SW. dense fogs are often produced on the Bay of Fundy, and extend from 15 to 20 miles inland.

A large portion of the province is covered with dense forests of pine, hackmatack, spruce, cedar, etc., which furnish immense quantities of timber for export and ship-building. Potatoes, turnips, peas, beans, and other leguminous plants thrive admirably, but agriculture has made only indifferent progress. The inhabitants generally find it more profitable to follow the lumbering business. The chief agricultural crops in 1900 were: oats, 5,281,690 bushels; potatoes, 4,797,769 bushels; buckwheat, 1,527,610 bushels; and spring wheat, 504,301 bushels. The rivers, lakes, and sea-coast of New Brunswick abound in fish of almost every variety. The Bay of Chaleur and Bay of Fundy are celebrated for their fisheries. The salmon-fisheries of New Brunswick are among the finest in the world. The Buctouche, Caraquette, and Cocaigne oyster-beds are as prolific as they are famous, and the finest lobsters are found in profusion. Ship-building is extensively prosecuted in the province, more especially at St. John and on the Miramichi. Vessels are also built at St. Andrews, at various coves and harbors on the Bay of Fundy, along the banks of the St. John and Petitcodiac, and at Cocaigne, Richibucto, Bathurst, Dalhousie, Campbellton, and other ports on the N. shore. The principal articles manufactured in New Brunswick are sawed lumber, cotton and woollen goods, wooden-ware of all descriptions, paper, iron castings, nails, mill-machinery, locomotives, steam-engines, boots and shoes, canned goods, refined sugar, rope and cordage, etc.

The province is traversed by three or four important trunk lines of railway and by several minor lines and branches, the whole affording communication with the principal towns of Canada and the United States. There were in 1900 1438 miles of railroad in operation.

The province is divided into 15 counties, or districts, as follows: Albert, Carleton, Charlotte, Gloucester, Kent, Kings, Madawaska, Northumberland, Queens, Restigouche, St. John, Sunbury, Victoria, Westmoreland, and York. Pop. in 1901, 331,120. Capital, Fredericton. The largest city is Saint John.

A large majority of the inhabitants are descendants of emigrants from Great Britain and Ireland. There are a number of French Acadians, settled chiefly in the counties on the N. shore and in the valley of the Madawaska, and there are also a few Micmacs, Melicites, and other Indians in the northern part of the province and on the St. John River.

The affairs of the province are administered by a lieutenant-governor, aided by an executive council and a legislative chamber of 46 members. The most important educational institution is the University of Fredericton.

New Brunswick was first settled by the French in 1639. It formed part, with Nova Scotia, of Acadia, which was ceded by France to England in 1713, boundary disputes regarding New Brunswick continuing, however, till the peace of Paris in 1763. The first British settlers in the province emigrated from Scotland to the Miramichi in 1764. In 1784 New Brunswick was separated from Nova Scotia and constituted a separate colony. In 1867 New Brunswick became part of the Dominion of Canada.

The principal sculptural monuments are a column surmounted by a statue of Earl Gray, and a bronze statue of George Stephenson, the perfecter of the locomotive engine. The educational institutions of Newcastle comprise a medical school and a college of science, both forming part of Durham University, a Mechanics Institute, an Institute of Mining Engineering, a natural-history museum, and a public library of about 120,000 volumes. There are numerous learned societies. Newcastle is the centre of the great coal-field of Northumberland and Durham. Vast quantities of lead products are turned out here. There are immense locomotive- and engineering-works, and ship-building, including the building of men-of-war, is carried on on a large scale. The foundry products are of great importance and include heavy ordnance. Among the manufactures are chemical products, earthenware, hardware, anchors, rails, fire-brick, glass, machinery, gas-retorts, pipe, cement, etc. Glass-staining is carried on and grindstones are exported in immense numbers. There are a large number of mills of all kinds. Both banks of the Tyne are lined for 10 miles with quays, docks, etc., and the deepening of the river by dredging has rendered the city accessible to large vessels. Newcastle returns 2 members to parliament. Pop. in 1801, 28,400; in 1851, 87,800; in 1891, 186,300; in 1901, 215,328.

Newfoundland, nu'fond-land' (L. Terra Nova; Fr. Terre-Neuve, tair nuv), a large island in the Atlantic Ocean, at the mouth of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, between lat. 46° 37′ and 51° 39′ N. and lon. 52° 35′ and 59° 25′ W. Its SW. point approaches Cape Breton; NW. are the shores of Labrador, from which it is separated by the Strait of Belle Isle; E. is the Atlantic Ocean, and W. the Gulf of St. Lawrence. It lies nearer to Europe than any other part of America. Its extreme length is about 320 miles. Area estimated at 42,200 sq. m. It is exceedingly irregular and is indented by deep bays and harbors (St. George Bay, in the SW.; White, Notre Dame, and Bonavista bays, in the N.; Trinity and Conception, in the E.; St. Mary, Placentia, and Fortune, in the S.), many of which are extensive, commodious, and well sheltered. The interior of the island has never been thoroughly explored, but appears to be a rocky, undulating plateau of no great elevation, much intersected by rivers and lakes, and but thinly wooded, except on the banks of the rivers. Ridges or isolated hills, known as "tolts," rise from this plateau to heights of 1000–1500 feet. There are districts called barrens, occupying the summits of the hills and elevated tracts, covered with a thin and scrubby vegetation, with patches of gravel and boulders and crumbling fragments of rock. In the W., a short distance from the coast and continued into the North Peninsula, are the Long Range Mountains, 1500–2000 feet high. The sea-cliffs are for the most part bold and lofty (Blomidon Cliff or the Blomidons, on the Bay of Islands, 2125 feet) with deep water close to the shore.

The rivers of Newfoundland are numerous, but the majority are small. The largest are the Humber, River of Exploits, Gander, Terra Nova, and Salmon. Nearly all the rivers issue from lakes or ponds in the interior. Many of them abound in excellent salmon. Fresh-water lakes and ponds are also numerous, the surface covered with fresh water being estimated at one-third of the whole island. The principal lakes in the island are Gander, Deer, Grand, and Red Indian. The prevalent formation of Newfoundland is granite, and in some parts porphyry, quartz, gneiss, mica, and clay-slate, representing the Laurentian and Huronian periods, with areas of Cambrian and Silurian (principally in the W.), and a considerable development of the Carboniferous series. The minerals of the island comprise silver, copper, lead, chromic iron, magnetic iron, specular iron, manganese, nickel, plumbago, gypsum, serpentine, jaspers, white and black marble, limestone, and coal. The vast gypsum deposits occur principally on St. George Bay and along the Codray River. The coal is a continuation of the deposits of Cape Breton and its main location is near St. George Bay. Some gold-bearing quartz has latterly been discovered in the eastern parts.

The climate, being insular, is not liable to so great changes in temperature as that of the neighboring continental provinces, the winter being much milder and the summer not nearly so warm. The average temperature of February, the coldest month, is 22°, of July, the hottest, 60°, and of the year, 40°. The winter lasts from December till April. The summer is short. In May and the beginning of June dense fogs prevail on the banks and neighboring shores. The principal trees are spruce, birch, larch, willow, ash, and fir. These do not attain to a large size. Recumbent evergreens are to be met in great variety; berry-growing bushes abound in every swamp. European and American grasses, also red and white clover, are abundant. In several sections agriculture can be carried on with profit. In the neighborhood of many of the lakes and rivers there are valuable soils. Potatoes yield well and are of excellent quality; green crops thrive in many districts. Wheat is grown to some extent and there have been fair crops of barley, oats, and hay. Apples, plums, and cherries have been raised with success; gooseberries, strawberries, and raspberries of very good quality are grown. In 1901 there were 85,533 acres of cultivated land. The timber lands are unsettled and there is little lumbering.

The only animal peculiar to the island is the Newfoundland dog, famous the world over; the better breed is obtained now chiefly from Belle Isle (island). Among the wild animals are the deer, wolf, bear, beaver, marten, and lynx. Land and aquatic birds abound. Seals are numerous on the coasts, as are also whales, grampuses, and porpoises; while for fish there is no place in the world comparable to Newfoundland, especially for cod. The famous Grand Banks swarm with fish. These banks form a vast submarine elevation, being over 600 miles in length and 200 miles in breadth, with a depth of water varying from 10 to 160 fathoms. Fishing on the banks is open to all. The cod-fishery opens in June and lasts till the middle of November and may be said to form the chief occupation of the inhabitants of the island. The average annual value of this fishery is $6,000,000–$9,000,000, including the dried cod-fish exported, the quantity consumed by the population, and the oil extracted from the fish. From 25,000 to 30,000 people engage in the Labrador fishery. The shore fishery is prosecuted along the whole coast-line in Newfoundland and is the mainstay of a very large portion of the population. The seal-fishery is next in importance, employing many sailing-vessels and a number of steamers. Another important branch of the fishing industry is the taking and canning of lobsters. The fishing fleet of Newfoundland consisted in 1900 of 1449 vessels and over 20,000 boats. The values of the obtained product were: dried cod, $5,446,067; cod oil, $301,091; seal-skins, $162,005; seal oil, $433,011; canned lobsters, $441,593; and pickled herring, $146,611. The number of inhabitants engaged in the fisheries in 1901 was 62,674. The imports of the colony consist of all articles used for food and clothing, as well as for general domestic purposes. The principal exports are fish and fish oils, seal oil and skins. Trade is chiefly with Great Britain, the United States, and the British colonies.

The public affairs of Newfoundland are administered by a governor, an executive council of 9 members, a legislative council not exceeding 15 members, and a legislative assembly of 36 representatives.

There were, in 1899, 638 miles of railroads in operation, one line traversing the interior from E. to W. Communication between all important points along the coast is made by regular lines of steamers.

The inhabitants of Newfoundland are principally the descendants of the settlers from England and Ireland. The aboriginal inhabitants have been extinct for many years past. There are a few Micmacs in the island.

The population of the island in 1901 was 217,037. Connected with it administratively is the eastern division of Labrador, with a population of 3947. Capital, St. Johns, with a population of 25,594. Other towns are Harbor Grace (pop. 5184), Carbonear, Twillingate, and Bonavista.

Newfoundland is supposed to have been discovered by Northmen about the year 1000. It was rediscovered by John Cabot in 1497. Its fisheries attracted seamen from Portugal, Spain, England, and France. In 1583 Sir Humphrey Gilbert took possession for Elizabeth, but the claim of England was long disputed by France. In 1713 it was declared by the treaty of Utrecht to belong wholly to Great Britain, the French reserving a right to fish on certain parts of the coast, the rocky islets of St. Pierre and Miquelon being also assigned to them on condition that they should not be used for military purposes. The first legislative assembly met in 1833.

New Guinea (ghin′ee), or Papua, a large island lying N. of Australia, from which it is in part separated by Torres Strait. The western half, with an area of about 152,000 sq. m. and a population estimated at 200,000, is a possession of Holland; the eastern half forms British New Guinea (area, 90,540 sq. m.; pop. 350,000, inclusive of the D'Entrecasteaux and Louisiade island groups) and Kaiser-Wilhelms Land. See BRITISH NEW GUINEA, KAISER-WILHELMS LAND, PAPUA, etc.

New Guinea, Dutch, a possession of the Netherlands, comprising virtually all of the island of Papua lying W. of the meridian of 141° E. lon. Area, about 152,000 sq. m. Pop. in 1900, estimated at about 200,000. The region, both on the coast-line and in the interior, is still largely unknown. Its most important features are the great indentation in the N. known as Geelvink Bay and the mountains which are assumed to traverse the interior in a more or less E. and W. direction, and which have received the names of Charles Louis Mountains, in about lon. 136°, and that of the Snow Range farther east. Some of the highest elevations have been thought to reach 8000–10,000, or even 12,000 feet, but the determinations of altitude are doubtful. The largest stream is the Amberno River, which discharges on the N. coast immediately W. of lon. 138° E. The climatic conditions are essentially tropical, with a generally high temperature (annual average about 79°) and little variation. Much of the surface is covered with luxuriant forests (palms, acacias), whose primeval character has as yet been but little disturbed. The cultivated plants are rice, sugar-cane, maize, various tropical fruits, bread-fruit, spices, etc. The indigenous quadrupeds are mainly of the marsupial type. Among the birds are a number of the more beautiful species of bird of paradise, the emu, and several green pigeons. The native inhabitants are Papuans (mixed with Malays) and the so-called mountain Papuans or Alfurus. There are a number of mission and trading stations, which are regular ports of call, and of which the most important is Dorey, near Cape Vlakke, on the N. coast.

New Hampshire, one of the New England states of the American Union, bounded N. by the province of Quebec, Canada, E. by Maine (from which, on the SE., it is separated by the Salmon Falls River) and the Atlantic Ocean, S. by Massachusetts, and W. by Vermont. Its W. boundary is the W. bank of the Connecticut River as far northward as the mouth of Hall's Stream, which affluent the state boundary-line ascends to its source, and thence it follows eastwardly the crest of one of the ranges called Notre Dame Mountains by the Canadians, till the W. boundary of Maine is reached. Its southern limit is in lat. 42° 40′ N. (very nearly), and the northern in 45° 18′ N. Area of the land-surface, 9005 sq. m.; of the appertaining waters, about 300 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—Most of the state has a rough and hilly surface, except the extreme SE. The mountains are, with the exception of those of North Carolina, the loftiest members of the Appalachian system, and present the highest summits of the northeast United States. The White Mountains (including the Franconia Mountains), in the northern half of the state, are noted for their wild and grand scenery. The loftiest summits are Mount Washington, 6293 feet; Adams, 5805 ft.; Jefferson, 5725 ft.; Clay, 5554 ft.; Madison, 5380 ft.; Lafayette, 5269 ft. With the exception of the last (which is in the Franconia Mountains) all of these are grouped in the Presidential Range. Southward of the White Mountains proper there are numerous elevated points, of which mounts Chocorua (3508 ft.), Moosilauke (about 4800 ft.), and Grand Monadnock (3180 ft.) are among the most noteworthy. The lake scenery of the state is hardly less beautiful than the scenery of the mountains. The largest of the internal bodies of water is Lake Winnepesaukee (Winnipiseogee) in the south-central part. Other lakes, all of which attract sportsmen and summer-residents, are Umbagog (in the NE., on the Maine boundary-line), New Found, Squam, and Sunapee. The primeval forests of the extreme N. afford much timber and are the resort of the angler and sportsman in the proper season. The valley of the Connecticut is noted for the quiet beauty of its farms and villages.

Rivers.—The principal streams are the Connecticut with its tributaries,—the Upper, Lower, Wild Ammonoosuck, and the Mascoma, Sugar, and Ashuelot; the Merrimac, with its longest arm, the Pemigewasset, and its tributaries,—the Winnepesaukee, Contoocook, Souhegan, Nashua, Spickett, Suncook, etc.; the Piscataqua, whose estuary is the harbor of Portsmouth, and which receives the Squamscot, Lamprey, Cocheco, and Salmon Falls; and the rivers Ossipee, Saco, and Androscoggin, which flow into Maine from this state. The streams of New Hampshire afford great water-power, which is largely utilized.

Coast-line, etc.—The coast of New Hampshire extends about 22 miles in a right line, and the only harbor is shared by Portsmouth and Kittery, Me. The Isles of Shoals, in the Atlantic Ocean, belong in part to New Hampshire and in part to Maine. At Rye and Hampton there are fine sea-beaches, much resorted to in summer.

Geology.—The Eozoic (or Laurentian and Huronian) rocks prevail throughout most of New Hampshire. In the SE. there are highly metamorphosed strata of early Palæozoic age. Near the rivers there are some large alluvial plains. Glacial drift and morainic boulders cover the larger part of the state, even to nearly the loftier points on the mountains. The metallic wealth of the state is not large, and consists in the main of iron-ores (worked chiefly at Franconia), copper, lead, silver, zinc (these three in Madison and Warren cos.), and tin, of which a vein is found near Jackson. Fine building granite is extensively quarried at several points (Concord, Plymouth, Milford, Pelham, etc.). Francestown has quarries of a fine soapstone, which is also common elsewhere. Some of the largest beryls known to exist have been found in New Hampshire, at Alstead and Acworth. Useful mineral waters flow at several points. Mica, plumbago, quartz-sand, scythe-stones (Indian Pond, White Mountains), and pyrites are among the utilized minerals. The granite quarried in 1903 was valued at $854,513. In 1901 the production of mica was 65,800 tons (in 1900, 191,118 tons).

Climate.—New Hampshire enjoys a healthful climate, with, however, severe winters. In the southern part of the state the average January temperature is about 20°–25°, and the temperature of July 70°. The northern sections are considerably colder. There the mercury sometimes registers a temperature of —40°. The general annual rainfall is 30–35 inches, increasing somewhat on the sea-board and considerably on the mountains.

Agriculture.—Although large gains were noted in every census of New Hampshire previous to 1860, yet her agricultural interests have long been declining, the farming population removing in great numbers to the manufacturing towns and to other states. In the valley lands near the Connecticut, even in the N., and in some parts of the Merrimac valley, there are exceedingly fertile and valuable farms and many of the abandoned farms were once productive. Much of the land, however, is stony and of an untoward character, and gives better returns as woodland and pasture than as tillage-land. The hay-crop is by far the most important in New Hampshire. The chief agricultural crops in 1900 were: oats, 995,148 bushels; corn, 934,768 bushels; wheat, 8085 bushels; barley, 102,786 bushels; rye, 15,168 bushels; buckwheat, 61,578 bushels; potatoes, 1,809,516 bushels; and hay, 518,586 tons. The remaining woodland of the state, almost entirely of second growth, except in the extreme N., and consisting mainly of pine and spruce, was estimated in 1900 to cover about 5200 sq. m., or somewhat more than half of the surface. Fruit-raising is generally profitable. Dairy-farming and wool-growing are carried on to some extent. Tobacco is grown in the SW. part of the state, near the Connecticut River, the soil of the valley being well adapted to this crop. Milk is very profitably shipped by rail to the Boston market.

Manufactures constitute by far the most important industrial interest of New Hampshire. The busy cities of Manchester, Dover, and Nashua, and scores of smaller towns, have flourishing manufactures; indeed, there is hardly a town of any considerable size which has not more or less manufacturing industry. Cotton and woollen goods, boots and shoes, machinery and other metallic wares are the leading articles of manufacture; but paper, carriages, furniture, hosiery, leather, lumber, wooden-ware, and a very large variety of other goods are extensively made. The values of some of the leading articles of manufacture in 1900 were: boots and shoes, $23,405,558; woollens, $10,381,056; cotton goods, $22,998,249; paper and wood-pulp, $7,204,733; lumber and timber products, $9,218,310.

The railroads, which in 1846 extended 92 miles, in 1890 measured 1147 miles, and in 1900, 1193 miles.

The counties are 10 in number,—viz., Belknap, Carroll, Cheshire, Coos, Grafton, Hillsboro, Merrimack, Rockingham, Strafford, and Sullivan.

The principal cities and towns are Concord, the capital (pop. in 1900, 19,632), Manchester (56,987), Nashua (23,898), Dover (13,207), Portsmouth (10,637), Keene, Rochester, Berlin, Somersworth, Laconia, Claremont, Exeter, and Franklin. These are nearly all important manufacturing centres.

Government, etc.—The governor and the principal state officers, as well as the members of the legislature (senators and representatives) are elected biennially. The state sends 2 members to the lower house of the national Congress.

Education.—The public school system of New Hampshire is an effective one, all parts of the state, except the sparsely settled districts, having excellent free schools. Hanover is the seat of Dartmouth College, with its affiliated schools of science, engineering, medicine, and agriculture. This is the leading educational institution of the state. Other advanced institutions are St. Anselm's College, at Manchester, Phillips Exeter Academy at Exeter, St. Paul's School at Concord, and Proctor Academy at Andover. The state normal school is at Plymouth. Among the public institutions are the state insane asylum and the state prison at Concord, an incorporated orphanage at Franklin, a state reform school at Manchester, and a home for disabled soldiers and sailors at Tilton.

Population.—The original settlers of New Hampshire were of English descent, with a large admixture of the vigorous and enterprising Scotch-Irish stock, from which many of the principal New Hampshire families trace their descent; but there has been much emigration to other states and this emigration has been only in part compensated for by the inflow of foreign immigrants, principally of Irish, French Canadian, and Nova Scotian birth. Pop. in 1790, 141,899; in 1800, 183,762; in 1810, 214,360; in 1820, 244,161; in 1830, 269,328; in 1840, 284,574; in 1850, 317,976; in 1860, 326,073; in 1870, 318,300; in 1880, 346,991; in 1890, 376,530; and in 1900, 411,588. The foreign-born inhabitants in 1900 numbered 88,107.

History.—Part of New Hampshire was included in the grant made to Mason and Gorges by the council for New England in 1622. The settlement of the region began in 1623. About twenty years later it came under the jurisdiction of Massachusetts. In 1679 New Hampshire was constituted a royal province. The boundaries were not definitively fixed until long after. New Hampshire was one of the thirteen original states (1776). This state has given to the nation one president, Franklin Pierce.

Pop. in 1890, 209,058; in 1900, 269,163.

New Haven, a city and port of entry, the capital of New Haven co., Conn., and the largest and most populous city of the state, is situated at the head of New Haven Bay, 4 miles above its entrance into Long Island Sound, and on the New York, New Haven and Hartford R., 73 miles ENE. of New York. Lat. of the observatory 41° 19′ 22″ N.; lon. 72° 55′ 8″ W. New Haven stands upon a plain which is enclosed landward by an amphitheatre of hills, of which two, called East Rock and West Rock, rise from 360 to 400 feet in rugged, perpendicular precipices, producing a very picturesque effect. Three small streams, the Quinnipiac (Quinepiac) on the E., with Mill River, its affluent, and the West River on the W., intersect this plain and fall into the harbor. The streets of New Haven are wide and generally skirted with majestic elms, for which this city is noted and from which it has received the name of "City of Elms." East Rock Park, with its driveways to the top, and West Rock Park, with the famous Judges' Cave, the place of concealment of the regicides Whalley and Goffe, are among the pleasure-grounds of the outskirts, to which the city itself adds a number of smaller parks. On the Public Green are located the city-hall and free public library. New Haven is the seat of Yale University, one of the foremost educational institutions of the country. It was chartered by the colonial general assembly of Connecticut as a collegiate school at Saybrook in 1701. It was named in 1718, after the removal of the institution to New Haven, in honor of Elihu Yale (1648–1721), an early patron of the college, whose father was for some time a resident of New Haven. Among the more prominent buildings which are located on the university campus are Osborn Hall, Dwight Hall, College Library (with 300,000 volumes), Vanderbilt Dormitory, and the Art School. Other institutions or buildings of the university are the Peabody Museum of Natural History (with an exceptionally important collection of fossil remains), the Sheffield Scientific School, with chemical, physical, mining, engineering, and biological laboratories, the observatory, and the school of forestry. The attendance at the university in 1904–05 was nearly 3000. Among the other educational institutions of the city may be mentioned the Hopkins Grammar School, founded in 1660, Boardman Manual Training School, Hillhouse High School, and a state normal school. The city is the seat of several learned societies—the Connecticut Academy of Sciences, New Haven Historical Society, etc. In the Old Burial-Ground of Grove Street are the graves of Samuel F. B. Morse, Noah Webster, Timothy Dwight, Eli Whitney, Theodore Winthrop, Benjamin Silliman, James D. Dana, William D. Whitney, and other distinguished men of the city. New Haven has a large inland and coastwise commerce, besides a considerable foreign trade, carried on both direct and through New York. It has several hundred manufacturing establishments, producing fire-arms, iron- and edge-tools, wire goods, carriages, clocks, hardware, rubber goods, corsets, musical instruments, pulp and paper, etc. The city has also slaughtering- and packing-industries.

New Haven was settled in 1638 by a company from London, led by John Davenport, a Puritan pastor, and Theophilus Eaton. It became the capital of the independent colony of New Haven, which was united with the Connecticut Colony in 1665 under the charter of 1662. It was the semi-capital of Connecticut from 1701 until 1873, when Hartford was made the sole capital. Part of New Haven was chartered as a city in 1784. Pop. of the township (town) in 1830, 10,678; in 1840, 14,390; in 1850, 22,529, of whom 20,341 resided within the city. In 1860 (the town and city having been made coextensive), the number of inhabitants was 39,267; in 1870, 50,840; in 1880, 62,882; in 1890, 81,298; in 1900, 108,027.

New Jersey, one of the Middle Atlantic states of the American Union, bounded NE. by New York, E. by New York and the Atlantic Ocean, S. by the Atlantic Ocean and Delaware Bay, and W. by Delaware and Pennsylvania. From New York it is separated, in part, by the Hudson River, New York Bay, Staten Island Sound, and Raritan Bay; and the Delaware River and its estuary wash the entire western border. It extends 167 miles N. and S., from lat. 38° 56′ to 41° 21′ N. Area, of the land-surface, 7525 sq. m.; of the appertaining waters, 290 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—In its physiographic aspect the state of New Jersey is properly divisible into two sections,—a northern and a southern,—the features of which are widely divergent. In the NW. the Blue (or Kittatinny) and the Highland (known in parts as Schooley Mountain) ranges of mountains, with the intermediate and highly fertile Kittatinny Valley, traverse the state. These mountains nowhere exceed 1800 feet in altitude. Southeastward lies a wide plateau, broken by low ridges, called mountains (Orange Mountain, Springfield Mountain), which are more or less continuous with, or run parallel to, the Palisade traps of the Hudson River. Adjoining this is an undulating lowland, descending to sea-level, and in part occupied by marshes and oceanic overflows (Hackensack Valley). The remaining three-fifths of the state, lying southward from a line running from Trenton to Raritan Bay, is a very level tract, nowhere exceeding 400 ft. in height, the Atlantic Highlands (or Navesink Hills) being the principal elevations. High Point, in the extreme N. and close to the boundaries of New York and Pennsylvania, has an elevation of 1800 ft.; Mount Tammany, at the Delaware Water Gap, rises to 1480 ft. Much of the southern part of New Jersey is very sandy and bears unmistakable evidence of having emerged peacefully from the sea and of having undergone little disturbing change since that time (Cretaceous, Tertiary).

Rivers, Coast-Line, Navigation, etc.—Besides the Hudson and Delaware, the principal streams are the Wallkill, Hackensack, Passaic, Raritan, Shark, Manasquan, Metedeconk, Toms, Little Egg Harbor, Great Egg Harbor, Tuckahoe, Maurice, Cohansey, Rancocas, Millstone, Musconetcong, and Paulinskill rivers. Of these a number in the lower part of the state are navigable tidal streams, which, with the "thoroughfares," or navigable channels in the salt-marshes, afford considerable extent of inland navigation. This is increased by the canals of the state, of which the chief are the Morris Canal and the Delaware and Raritan, now almost in a condition of disuse. The latter canal is a channel of direct water communication between New York and Philadelphia. Along the eastern coast there is a series of bays and sounds fenced from the open sea by long spits of sand, broken by inlets, through some of which small vessels can pass. Among these are the Shark River, Wreck Pond, Manasquan, Barnegat, Egg Harbor, New, Brigantine, Absecon, Townend's, Hereford, Turtle Gut, and Cold Spring inlets.

Places of Interest to Tourists.—Among these are the Delaware Water Gap, the Palisades of the Hudson River (a vast and strikingly picturesque basaltic ridge rising to 400–475 feet), the Passaic Falls at Paterson, lakes Hopatcong and Greenwood, the sea-bathing resorts at Cape May, Atlantic City, Long Branch, Deal, Manasquan, Barnegat, Tuckerton, and other places on the coast, Lakewood, etc.

Geology, Minerals, etc.—In the NW. the Silurian and Devonian formations prevail, and among their economic resources are abundant and excellent roofing-slates and building- and flag-stones, including magnesian limestone, used by both the lime-burner and the stone-cutter. Rich hematites are also abundant here. The Highlands are of Archæan rocks and afford zinc-ores, franklinite, gneiss, and abundant magnetic iron-ores (product of the magnetic iron-ores of the state in 1903, 484,796 long tons). Southeastward of the Highlands comes a Triassic plateau, much broken by trap dikes and affording copper-ores, red sandstone for building uses, etc. Passing southeastward, we next encounter a belt of the Cretaceous, which, like the preceding formations, extends from NE. to SW. across the state. It affords the valuable greensand marl, formerly much employed as a fertilizer, and its beds of moulding-sand, fire-clay, and fictile clays are highly important. A line drawn from Salem to Long Branch would somewhat roughly define the SE. border of the Cretaceous. The remainder of the state is of the Tertiary and Quaternary ages, and its useful minerals are peat, bog-iron ore, and glass-sand. Glacial gravels cover a large portion of the southern section of the state, while a "terminal moraine," marking the limit to the advance of the great northern ice-sheet of the Glacial Period, extends across the state from a point opposite Staten Island to Belvidere on the Delaware.

Climate.—New Jersey enjoys on the whole a healthful climate, which is considerably influenced by proximity to the ocean, but there are stretches where malarial fevers prevail. The average summer temperature is about 67° in the N. and 75° in the S., and there is a corresponding difference in the winter temperatures of the two sections (25° and 35°). The mean annual rainfall is between 42 and 50 inches.

Agriculture.—The Kittatinny Valley and the Triassic and Cretaceous belts of the state are among the finest agricultural lands in the Union, and the light sandy Tertiary soils, when dressed judiciously with fertilizers, have been cultivated with success. The pine region in the S., otherwise unproductive, has been found well adapted to the raising of grapes and small fruits for market. Market-gardening, truck-farming, and commercial floriculture are extensively carried on near New York and Philadelphia. The value of the vegetable product in 1900 was $8,400,000, and floriculture yielded nearly $2,000,000. Several million dollars' worth of cranberries are sometimes produced in a year, chiefly in the marsh region near the coast, and probably one-half of all the cranberries consumed in the United States comes from this region. Apples, cider, pears, peaches, blackberries, raspberries, and strawberries are important products. The chief agricultural products in 1900 were: corn, 8,493,012 bushels; oats, 2,812,089 bushels; wheat, 2,344,582 bushels; potatoes, 3,342,015 bushels; and hay, 499,102 tons. The sales of milk, butter, wool, hops, tobacco, grass-, clover-, garden- and flower-seeds, and nursery trees and plants are of large aggregate value.

Manufactures.—New Jersey, favored by its easy communication with the Pennsylvania coal region and the great markets of the North and by the amplitude of its water-power, has become one of the leading states in the Union in its manufactures. It ranks first among the states of the Union in the manufacture of silk and silk goods (chief centre, Paterson), second in the production of pottery (Trenton), and stands well in the front in the manufacture of textiles, boots and shoes, electrical appliances, iron and steel, sewing-machines, locomotives, cars, trunks, general hardware, glass, chemicals, paints, india-rubber, carpets, machinery of all classes, leather and leather goods, etc. The values of the products of the chief industries in 1900 were: textiles of all classes, $72,921,528; foundry- and machine-shop products, $32,621,229; iron and steel, $24,381,699; refined petroleum, $29,649,460; malted liquors, $14,386,456; leather and leather goods, $13,747,155; chemicals, $12,207,289; pottery, $8,940,723; electrical apparatus, $6,447,154; sewing-machines, $6,643,348; rubber goods, $8,458,274; glass, $5,093,822; and tobacco, $7,788,379. Extensive ship-building yards have been established on the Delaware River and at Elizabeth (Elizabethport), and there are large dyeing establishments and bleacheries. There were, in 1899, 981 manufactories of cigars and tobacco, whose output was 85,622,665 cigars, 484,950 cigarettes, and 15,601,278 pounds of smoking, plug, and fine-cut tobacco.

Fisheries.—The fisheries of the state include deep-sea fishing, the oyster-trade, the taking of shad, bass, sturgeon, etc., in the rivers, and the capture of menhaden and other fish for oil and fish guano. The state has done much for the furthering of the fresh-water fisheries and the Delaware has been very successfully stocked with black bass. Small menhaden are packed in oil in this state and sold for sardines. The anchovy abounds in the waters of New Jersey. The bluefish, sheepshead, and Spanish mackerel are among the highly prized food-fishes extensively caught here. The value of the oyster-catch has in some years reached nearly $1,800,000.

Railroads.—In 1830 there were 14 miles of road in operation. In 1850 there were 318 miles; in 1860, 560 miles; in 1870, 1125 miles; in 1880, 1684 miles; in 1890, 2063 miles; and in 1900, 2257 miles.

Education.—The highest seat of learning is Princeton University, located at Princeton, which is one of the leading educational centres of the United States and with which is affiliated the Theological Seminary of the Presbyterian Church. Other important institutions are Rutgers College, at New Brunswick; Stevens Institute of Technology, at Hoboken; Seton Hall College, at South Orange; and Drew Theological Seminary, at Madison. The state normal school is located at Trenton.

The counties number 21, as follows: Atlantic, Bergen, Burlington, Camden, Cape May, Cumberland, Essex, Gloucester, Hudson, Hunterdon, Mercer, Middlesex, Monmouth, Morris, Ocean, Passaic, Salem, Somerset, Sussex, Union, and Warren.

The principal cities and towns are Trenton, the capital (pop. in 1900, 73,307), Newark, the most populous town (246,070), Jersey City (206,433), Paterson (105,171), Camden (75,935), Hoboken (59,364), Elizabeth (52,130), Bayonne (32,722), Atlantic City (27,838), Passaic (27,777), Orange (24,141), East Orange (21,506), and New Brunswick (20,006). In the summer season many of the sea-side resorts are populous places, and thriving suburbs are numerous in the vicinity of the larger cities.

Constitution, etc.—The governor is chosen every 3 years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives. The members of the former are elected for a term of 3 years and those of the latter for 1 year. The state has 10 representatives in the lower house of the national Congress.

The population in 1708 was estimated at 40,000; in 1790 it was 184,139; in 1800, 211,149; in 1810, 245,562; in 1820, 277,426; in 1830, 320,823; in 1840, 373,306; in 1850, 489,555; in 1860, 672,035; in 1870, 906,096; in 1880, 1,131,116; in 1890, 1,444,933; and in 1900, 1,883,669. The foreign-born population in 1900 was 431,884.

History.—The Dutch settled at Bergen before 1620, the region being regarded as part of New Netherland. Soon after, some Swedes settled on the lower Delaware, regarding the country as a part of their province of New Sweden. They were dispossessed in 1655 by Peter Stuyvesant. In 1664 New Netherland passed to the English. The duke of York (the future James II.) immediately made over the portion included in the present New Jersey to Lord Berkeley and Sir George Carteret. The province was named New Jersey from the island of Jersey, of which Carteret had been administrator. In 1676 the province was divided into West New Jersey and East New Jersey, the former being under a Quaker proprietorship and the latter the property of Carteret. West New Jersey was soon sold to William Penn, who in 1682 purchased East New Jersey also. In 1702 the government of both colonies was transferred to the crown, the two being united. Down to 1736 the governor of New York was also governor of New Jersey (which had its separate assembly). New Jersey was one of the thirteen original states (1776) and was an important theatre of war in the revolutionary stuggle.

New Mexico, a southwestern territory of the United States, bounded N. by Colorado, E. by Oklahoma and Texas, S. by Texas and Mexico, and W. by Arizona. It lies between lat. 31° 20′ and 37° N. and between lon. 103° and 109° W. Area, 122,460 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—New Mexico is a region of high plateaus, having an altitude of from 3000 to 6000 feet and a general southward inclination. These are traversed by mountain-ridges and mesas, bearing many isolated peaks, some of the mountains attaining a height of more than 12,000 ft. and towering above the line of perpetual snow, especially northward. The Sierra Blanca, in the S., attains an elevation of 14,269 ft. and Lastrucas Mountain, 13,150 ft. In the E. the territory takes in a part of the sterile and treeless Llano Estacado (or Staked Plain). The most noteworthy mountains, which are largely of the table or mesa character, are the Front Range, or main chain of the Rocky Mountains, the San Andres, Oscuro, and Organ Mountains, E. of the Rio Grande, the Guadalupe Mountains in the SE., the Raton Mountains in the NE., the Chusco Mountains in the NW., and the Zuñi, Datil, San Francisco, Mimbres, Mogollon, and Peloncillo mountains in the W. and SW. The Continental Divide is found in the western third of the state, a portion of which is occupied by the Zuñi Plateau. The valleys are usually somewhat level and often very fertile when irrigated, but the climate is very dry and in the more elevated parts the winter cold is severe. The territory is remarkably healthful and its bright skies and clear air are praised by every tourist. The mean annual temperature at Santa Fé is about 50°, the mean of the warmest month being 70° and of the coldest 30°. A maximum temperature of 115°–120° has been recorded. The average annual rainfall is about 15 inches.

Rivers.—The Rio Grande and its tributaries—the Pecos in the SE. and the Puerco in the W.—drain the greater part of New Mexico, but in the E. there is a large tract which is within the Mississippi Valley and is drained principally by the Canadian River. In the SW. rise the Gila and the Mimbres and far to the N. flow the Chaco and the head-streams of the Little Colorado. The streams are not large and are useful chiefly as supplying water for irrigation and for mining purposes.

Geology, Minerals.—New Mexico is largely covered by the Jura-Trias and Cretaceous deposits, carrying overlying patches of the Tertiary; but the mountain-ranges of syenite and porphyry at the time of their elevation have lifted with them and upheaved masses of the more ancient limestones and sandstones. The Carboniferous area enters in the S. and SE. The outlying mesas (or small table-lands) are generally of a lignitiferous sandstone. The mineral wealth of the territory is great. Both placer and quartz gold, as well as rich deposits of silver, copper, iron, and lead are extensively mined; mercury, zinc, and manganese also exist. The coal of New Mexico is chiefly of a bituminous character, but anthracite is also found and there are large deposits of serviceable lignite. The production of coal in 1903 was 1,541,781 tons: of gold, 13,043 fine ounces; of silver, 202,000 fine ounces; and of copper, 7,300,832 pounds. The precious minerals include the emerald and turquoise. Saline basins are frequent and afford a supply of good salt. The territory has many lava-beds and thermal and mineral springs.

Vegetation and Agriculture.—In the mountains of the N. there is a generous supply of pine, piñon, cedar, spruce, and juniper timber. In the S. grow walnut, oak, cottonwood, plane, mezquite, ebony, and other rare woods; but here the timber is nowhere abundant and some large districts are woodless. The grama (Chondrosium and Bouteloua), mezquite (Sesleria), and bunch grasses afford rich pasturage. One of the mezquite trees affords a valuable gum, much like gum arabic, and its sugary pods and bean-like seeds are eaten by man and beast. Stock-raising, particularly wool-growing, has long been the leading pursuit of the New Mexicans. The number of sheep registered in the stock-holdings for 1900 was 3,333,743. The apple, peach, melon, apricot, pomegranate, and fig do well, the three latter especially southward. The European vine grows here in the open air and the wines of New Mexico are reputed to have peculiarly rich and generous qualities, but these have not largely reached the general market. For agriculture and gardening irrigation is necessary and large canals leading from the streams to the farm-lands have been constructed. The length of irrigation ditches in 1899 was 2382 miles. The total area of the territory under farms (agricultural and stock) in 1900 was 5,130,878 acres. The chief agricultural crops in 1900 were: wheat, 3,847,347 bushels; corn, 554,752 bushels; oats, 229,994 bushels; potatoes, 18,544 bushels; and hay, 77,341 tons. The amount of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip was 16,093,424 pounds.

Manufactures.—The principal manufacturing industries are the milling of grain and of metalliferous quartz and the sawing of lumber. The Navajo Indians make blankets of surprising excellence, and the inhabitants of the pueblos make and sell much coarse pottery, while among the Spanish-Americans there are ingenious domestic manufactures. There are extensive wool-scouring establishments.

Commerce.—Santa Fé was long the objective point of a lucrative but hazardous overland trade, carried on mainly by caravans or wagon-trains from Independence, Mo., across the wide plains, then for 300 leagues without inhabitants save the hostile red man. But with the approach of railroads this adventurous commerce was displaced by newer and more expeditious methods of transportation. Prior to 1878 New Mexico had no railroads, but the territory is now traversed by several transcontinental lines. In 1900 there were 1758 miles of railroad.

The counties in 1900 were 19,—viz., Bernalillo, Chaves, Colfax, Donna Ana, Eddy, Grant, Guadaloupe, Lincoln, Mora, Otero, Rio Arriba, San Juan, San Miguel, Santa Fé, Sierra, Socorro, Taos, Union, and Valencia. Newer counties, Leonard Wood, Luna, McKinley, Quay, Roosevelt, Sandoval, and Torrance have been established since the official census. The principal towns are Santa Fé, the capital (pop. in 1900, 5603); Albuquerque, 6238; Las Vegas, Raton, Gallup, Silver City, and Roswell. A prevailing building-material in the towns is the adobe (or sun-dried brick), which here proves very durable. There are numerous inhabited pueblos (or villages of semi-civilized Indians), mostly towards the NW., besides many ruined towns of the same type,—the great and many-storied communal buildings presenting a strongly marked and massive architectural character.

Education.—As early as 1822 provision was made by the Mexican authorities for elementary public instruction, but the system was not effective, and after the acquisition by the United States no public schools were established before 1872. The Spanish language is still used in many of the schools. The more advanced educational institutions are the University of New Mexico at Albuquerque, the New Mexico College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts at Mesilla Park, a school of mines at Socorro, the New Mexico Military Institute at Roswell, and the Indian Industrial School at Santa Fé. The territorial normal school is at Silver City and New Mexico Normal University at Las Vegas. There are mission-schools among the Indians and a number of Roman Catholic parochial and higher schools.

Population.—About one-half of the people are of Mexican origin, with a dash of the Indian blood, and speak the Spanish language. In 1850 the pop. was 61,547; in 1860, 93,516; in 1870 (after the setting off of large areas to Arizona and Colorado) 91,879, exclusive of the tribal Indians, who, in 1874, numbered 25,268, of whom about 10,000 were Pueblo Indians, citizens of the United States; in 1880, 119,565; in 1890, 153,593; in 1900, 195,310. In addition to the Pueblo, the Indians include Navajos, Apaches, Utes, etc. The Mexicans and Pueblo Indians are Roman Catholics. The majority of the tribal Indians have not been christianized. They are making good progress in civilization.

History.—New Mexico was visited by Spaniards as early as 1536. The Spanish conquest was effected before the close of the century. Santa Fé was founded in the early years of the seventeenth century. The early settlers found many of the natives living, as at present, in a semi-civilized way, wearing cotton garments of their own weaving, manufacturing good pottery, and building enormous communal houses (or casas grandes), but having almost no knowledge of the use of metals. In 1846 the United States troops under Kearney occupied New Mexico, which was surrendered by Mexico in the treaty of Gaudalupe-Hidalgo in 1848. It then included the greater part of the present Arizona and part of the present Nevada and of Colorado. The territorial government was organized in 1850 and inaugurated in 1851. In 1853 a large strip was added in the S. by the Gadsden purchase. Arizona was set off in 1863, and in 1867 a section in the NE. was annexed to Colorado.

New Orleans, or'le-anz (Fr. Nouvelle-Orléans, noo-vĕll' or'lā'ôNs'), a city and port of entry of the state of Louisiana, the capital of Orleans parish and the commercial metropolis of the Gulf States, is situated on the Mississippi River, 106 miles above its mouth in the Gulf of Mexico. It is 141 miles W. by S. of Mobile, Ala., on the Southern Pacific, the Texas and Pacific, the Illinois Central and other railroads. Lat. 29° 58′ N.; lon. 90° 5′ W.

The main portion of the city is on the left bank of the Mississippi. The older part was built upon this side, following a bend of the river, which gave it a crescent shape, —whence its popular sobriquet, "the Crescent City." Later, its growth up the river, following an upward curve of the stream, changed the form of the city nearly to that of an S. But the city has been enlarged so that its present statutory area is nearly 200 sq. m., its territory being coterminous with that of Orleans parish and extending as far as Lake Pontchartrain. A large part of the land, however, is unreclaimed marsh, while much of that which has been drained is unimproved in the way of building, so that the actual city, whose corporate limits include the municipal suburb of Algiers, covers less than 40 sq. m. A considerable portion of the city is below high-water level of the river. To protect it from the annual inundations which would otherwise be inevitable, there has been constructed a high, broad embankment, or levee, extending along the city front and for a long distance up and down the river, and a similar levee has been built along and around the lake shores. The river levees are 15 feet wide and 14 ft. high, and are finished along the top so as to furnish a delightful promenade in favorable weather. The lowness of the city level renders drainage difficult and costly; the usual methods being impracticable, recourse has been had to a system of street canals, with powerful steam-pumps to raise and expel into Lake Pontchartrain all refuse water, sewage, and seapage. The river opposite New Orleans is ½-½ mile wide with a ship-channel of about 30 ft. depth, and is for many miles lined with docks and piers. One of the largest floating dry-docks in the world has been constructed here. The city is connected with nearly all the important ports of the world by direct steamship lines.

New Orleans is not notable as a whole for either the beauty or the grandeur of its architecture, a fact which makes more conspicuous the few really handsome and imposing edifices. The retention of the old French and Spanish houses, with their quaint architecture and enlivening colors, gives to the older quarters a picturesque aspect, to which the numerous gardens, decked with flowers of many kinds, shaded with forest trees, and enlivened with the song of various birds, many of them of bright plumage, add an "exotic" flavor which is unknown in any of the larger American cities. In the original (or French) city, known as the Vieux Carré, the streets, with few exceptions, are narrow, generally not exceeding 40 feet in width; but those of the portion distinguished as the American city are broad and exceedingly handsome thoroughfares. Canal Street is the main business street, especially for the retail trade, and is a favorite promenade. In the old quarter the most notable street is Esplanade Avenue. Among the important buildings of a more or less public character are the Federal building, the new court-house, cotton exchange, city-hall, charity hospital, Howard Library, Tilton Memorial Library, public library (with 120,000 volumes), the produce and sugar exchanges, Odd-Fellows' hall, the Cathedral of St. Louis, the old Spanish city-hall or Cabildo (now the building of the supreme court), and the archiepiscopal palace, one of the oldest buildings in the Mississippi Valley. Tulane University, the leading educational institution of the city, was founded in 1884 and was attended in 1900–01 by 1150 students. It has departments of medicine, law, arts and science, and technology. Other collegiate institutions are the Ursuline Academy, the Jesuit College, and the New Orleans, Leland, Southern, and Straight Universities, the last four for colored. Among the open places of the city are Jackson Square (the old Place d'Armes), Lafayette Square, and Lee Circle. The French Market is one of the sights of local flavor. The largest of the municipal parks are City Park and Audubon Park, the latter covering 250 acres.

New Orleans is the largest cotton market of the world, excepting Liverpool, and handles about 2,000,000 bales annually. As the outlet of the vast Mississippi Valley it commands a large domestic and foreign export trade, its more important shipments, in addition to cotton, comprising wool, sugar, rice, lumber, hides, grain, and tobacco. It imports large quantities of tropical fruits. The manufactured products of the city amount in a year to about $60,000,000, including machinery, cotton goods, boots and shoes, beer, cigars, ice, etc.

New Orleans was settled by the French in 1718 and was named in honor of the regent, the duke of Orleans. A few years later it was made the capital of the colony of Louisiana. In 1785 it had a population of 4700. In 1788 a large part of the town was destroyed by a conflagration. In 1794 the first newspaper, called Le Moniteur, was published. New Orleans became a possession of Spain in 1763, was reconveyed to the French in 1800, and passed to the United States in the purchase of Louisiana in 1803, at which time it contained a population of about 8000. The town was designated as the seat of the monarchy intended to have been established by the treason of Aaron Burr. In 1804 it was made a port of entry and the next year it was incorporated as a city. In 1810 its population had increased to 17,242. On January 8, 1815, the British under General Pakenham made an attack on the city and were signally defeated by the Americans under General Jackson. During the Civil War New Orleans was the seat of active military and naval operations. In April, 1862, Farragut bombarded and passed the Mississippi forts (Jackson and St. Philip) and, on May 1, General Butler took formal possession of the city. Pop. in 1820, 27,176; in 1830, 46,310; in 1840, 102,193; in 1850, 126,375; in 1860, 168,675; in 1870, 191,418; in 1880, 216,090; in 1890, 242,039; in 1900, 287,104. Average temperature of the year, 69°; maximum temperature, 101°. The annual rainfall is about 58 inches.

of the city. Fort Wolcott, with a United States torpedo-station, is on Goat Island. The climate of Newport is commended for its mildness and equability. Its balmy atmosphere, varied scenery, and fine facilities for bathing and boating have rendered it the most fashionable watering-place in the United States. Many wealthy citizens of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and elsewhere have erected cottages and palatial villas here, some of which are almost unsurpassed for their luxurious appointments and magnificent lawns. The city contains a state-house, a city-hall (both dating back to about the middle of the eighteenth century), an academy of music, a synagogue (1762, said to be one of the oldest in the United States), public libraries, casino, the Newport Reading Room, Trinity Church, in which the eminent philosopher Berkeley preached about 1730, the Redwood Library, which has about 50,000 volumes and many paintings, and Touro Park, in which stands an old building called the Round Tower (or Old Stone Mill), formerly supposed by many to have been built by the Northmen. The famous Cliff Walk, on which are many of the stateliest private mansions, follows the brow of the cliffs for about 3 miles. Another recreation course is the 10-mile Ocean Drive. Other places or points of interest in or about Newport are the U. S. Naval Training Station and War College, on Coaster Harbor Island; Naval Hospital, Lime-Rock Lighthouse, Easton's Beach, and the rock-fissure known as "Purgatory." Newport has some manufactures. It was settled in 1639 by William Coddington, and was one of the chief commercial cities of New England before the Revolution. The population in 1774 was about 12,000. The war of independence ruined its commerce and nearly depopulated the town, which has never recovered its commercial importance. New South Wales, a British colony, one of the states of Australia, having Queensland on the N., the Pacific Ocean on the E., Victoria on the S., and South Australia on the W. Area, 310,700 sq. m. The coast-line extends about 750 miles in a generally NNE. direction from Cape Howe to Point Danger. The Murray River and one or two of its tributaries form the principal portion of its southern limit, and its northern boundary follows the McIntyre River to a point on the 29th parallel of S. lat., which parallel it follows westward to the 141st degree of E. lon., which meridian is the W. boundary of the state.

Physical Aspect.—A range of rugged mountains—the Australian Alps—runs N. and S. at a distance of from 25 to 120 miles from the sea, with numerous lateral spurs. This range, which forms part of the great Eastern Cordillera of Australia and is commonly or collectively designated the Great Dividing Range (or Chain), is known in its different parts as the New England Range (in the N.), the Liverpool Range, the Blue Mountains (W. of Sydney), and the Muniong Range, the last, near the borders of Victoria, culminating in Mount Kosciusko (about 7300 feet), the loftiest point of the Australian continent. The mountains are in great part broken through by rugged gorges and cañons. The coastal strip E. of these mountains is generally fertile and fairly well watered, numerous streams descending from the mountain slopes. On the inner (or western) side of the mountains the region is largely one of elevated plains and plateaus,—a pastoral country of droughts and floods, in which semi-desert conditions are here and there emphasized. Most of the streams are dry during a considerable part of the year. The principal rivers, in addition to the Murray, are the Darling and the Murrumbidgee (with its tributary, the Lachlan), both of them tributaries of the Murray. They, with their tributaries, afford hundreds of miles of navigable waters.

Climate, Vegetation, Fauna.—The climate of New South Wales is on the whole not unhealthy. There are no severe frosts and snow is unknown. At Sydney the average annual temperature is 63°. In the interior a shade-temperature of 125°–130° is not absolutely infrequent. The rainfall in the coastal districts varies from 30 to 75 inches, but over a considerable part of the interior it is reduced to 10 inches or less. The great plains are fairly well wooded, open forests of eucalyptus and the mallee scrub giving the dominant aspect to the vegetation. In the E. the valleys produce a rich association of timber trees (oak, pine, cedar, poplar, ash), and European fruits and flowering plants have been extensively introduced. Thorny- and burr-plants are remarkably abundant. The indigenous mammalian life is represented characteristically by the monotremes and marsupials. (See AUSTRALIA.) Birds are exceedingly numerous, many of them noted for their magnificent plumage. Among the types may be enumerated the parrot, paroquet, lories, "laughing-jackass" (a kingfisher), the lyre-bird, bower-bird, various ground-doves, and the cursorial emu. The camel has been acclimatized in some parts of the Darling region. The rabbit has developed so inordinately as to be a hinderance and menace to pastoral pursuits.

Agricultural and Pastoral Resources.—Much of the soil is well adapted to cultivation. The principal products are wheat, Indian corn, barley, oats, potatoes, lucerne and other grasses, arrowroot, sugar-cane, tobacco, wine, brandy, and table grapes. Useful native fibres, kino, gums, and tanners' bark are collected. Cotton, silk, raisins, and tropical and other fruits (including oranges) are also produced, for the warm and equable climate of the northern interior tracts is adapted to the growth of tropical products as well as those of the temperate zone. There were in 1901–02 upward of 2,200,000 acres under crop, while one-fourth of the state is still forested. The great wealth of the country consists in its flocks and herds, supported by rich native grasses. There were in the state at the close of 1901, 41,858,000 sheep, 2,045,350 horned cattle, 486,258 horses, and 265,434 pigs. In prosperous years upward of 250,000,000 pounds of wool are exported. Live-stock, meats, leather, hides, fells, and tallow are also exported.

Mineral Wealth.—The mineral resources of the state comprise gold, silver, copper, iron, tin, antimony, coal, and many precious minerals, including the diamond. In 1901 the value of the gold product was £921,282; silver (pure), £50,484; silver-lead ore, £1,803,979; copper, £412,292. In the same year there were 96 coal-mines in operation, yielding a product of 5,968,426 tons, valued at £2,178,929.

New York (Sp. Nueva York, nwā'vā yorK; Ger. Neuyork, noi-orK'; L. No'vum Ebor'acum), a North Atlantic state of the American Union, bordering on the SE. upon the Atlantic Ocean and bounded on the W., NW., and N. by Lake Erie, the Niagara River, Lake Ontario, and Canada, from which last it is partly separated by the St. Lawrence River; E. by Vermont (from which it is partly separated by Lake Champlain), Massachusetts, and Connecticut; and S. by New Jersey and Pennsylvania. The 45th parallel of N. latitude forms part of the extreme northern boundary. The southernmost point is in lat. 40° 30′ N. The state limits include Long and Staten islands and the jurisdiction of the state covers Long Island Sound and the lower waters of the Hudson to low-water mark on the New Jersey side.

Besides Long and Staten islands may be enumerated Manhattan, Governor's, Bedloe's, Hart's, Randall's, Blackwell's, Ward's, Gardiner's, Plum, Shelter, Fisher's, Faulkner's, the Thimbles, Barren, Fire, and other islands in tidal waters; Grand, Goat, Beaver, Buckhorn, Cayuga, Squaw, Stanberry, Tonawanda, Rattlesnake, and other islands in the Niagara River; many of the Thousand Islands and others in the St. Lawrence and in Lake Ontario; and Crab, Schuyler, and Valcour islands in Lake Champlain. Area of the land-surface, 47,620 sq. m.; of the appertaining waters, 1550 miles.

The face of the country is exceedingly varied, being largely mountainous in its major eastern and northern sections and of a plateau character in the centre and west. The wilderness of the Adirondack Mountains occupies a considerable part of the state north of the Mohawk Valley and is still largely what its name signifies—a true wilderness. Hundreds of lakes, tarns, and ponds, with almost interminable connecting water-ways, are scattered through an extensive area of semi-primeval forest, justly famous for its grand and untamed nature. Here are located the culminating summits of the state,—Tahawus (or Mount Marcy), 5345 feet; McIntyre, 5112 ft.; Skylight, 4920 ft., etc. The mountains of this group are of very ancient construction and are usually referred to the Laurentian period. Of nearly the same age is the range known as the Highlands of the Hudson, which are approximately the most ancient of the Appalachian system of elevations, and represent the Blue Ridge of the states lying further south. Their highest point is Breakneck Mountain (Beacon Hill), 1635 ft. The Blue (or Kittatinny) Mountains of Pennsylvania and New Jersey are continued into New York as the Shawangunks (Sam's Point, upward of 2000 ft.). The wildly picturesque Catskills constitute another important mountain-mass of the state, rising in their highest points to over 4000 ft. (Slide Mountain, 4205 ft.; Hunter Mountain, 4025 ft.) They form part of the great Alleghany Plateau, and fall abruptly on their eastern face to the valley of the Hudson, as their westerly continuation, the Helderberg Mountains, falls to the depression of the Mohawk. Their rock constituents are chiefly sandstones and conglomerates of Devonian and sub-Carboniferous age, and may be said to represent the main mass of the Alleghany system. Forming the greater part of the boundary with Connecticut and Massachusetts is the Taconic Range, a member of the Green Mountain system. The plateau region of west-central New York, whose waters flow into the Great Lakes, is a very beautiful and fertile region, characterized by the presence of a remarkable series of long, deep, and narrow lakes, but southward of the water-shed the plateau has been cut by denudation into an irregular succession of ridges and valleys. See Adirondack Mountains, Catskill Mountains, Highlands, etc.

Hydrography.—New York is abundantly supplied with bounding water-ways and internal rivers, a circumstance to which was largely due its initial commercial development. The upper and lower New York bays,—on the former of which is situated the city of New York,—together constitute one of the most spacious harbors in the United States, their capacity being largely augmented by the deep and admirable harbor facilities afforded by the East and North (or Hudson) rivers. Sag Harbor, Greenport, Port Jefferson, Patchogue, and the Hudson River cities are ports on tidal waters. Dunkirk, Buffalo, and Niagara Falls on Lake Erie and the Niagara River, Charlotte, Fairhaven, and Oswego on Lake Ontario, Rochester on the Genesee, Cape Vincent and Ogdensburg on the St. Lawrence, and Plattsburg and Whitehall on Lake Champlain, are the important lake and river ports of the interior. The principal rivers of the state are the Hudson and St. Lawrence, both important commercial arteries; the Mohawk, an affluent of the Hudson, affording extensive water-power at Cohoes and Little Falls; the Oswego, which discharges into Lake Ontario the waters of the navigable lakes Canandaigua, Keuka, Seneca, Cayuga, Owasco, Skaneateles, Cross, Onondaga, Otisco, Cazenovia, and Oneida; the Genesee, Alleghany, and Susquehanna, with its main tributaries, the Charlotte, Chemung, Chenango, and Unadilla; the Delaware and its branches; the Black, Oswegatchie, Grass, Raquette, Chazy, Saranac, and Ausable, which are important streams of the N. and NE.; and the Wallkill River, a tributary of the Hudson. Besides the lakes already mentioned, there are innumerable other lakes, large and small, scattered over almost every part of the state. Of these we may name as especially noteworthy lakes Chautauqua (in the extreme W.), Cattaraugus, Hemlock, Honeoye, the Green Lakes, lakes Otsego (one of the sources of the Susquehanna River), Schuyler, Schroon, George (SE. of the Adirondack region and famous for its magnificent scenery), Placid, Upper and Lower Saranac, Upper and Lower Ausable, Pleasant, Piseco, etc., many of them favorite resorts for the angler and the summer tourist. The rivers and creeks of the state have long furnished much and unusually constant water-power, and the Niagara waters are to-day the greatest natural generator of power which has been put to the service of man.

Canals.—This state owns and has in operation canals and navigable feeders with an aggregate length of many hundreds of miles. Of these the Erie, from Buffalo to Albany, and the Champlain, from West Troy to Whitehall, are by far the most important. These canals are extremely serviceable in moving grain, coal, lumber, and other heavy and bulky freight; but the competition of railroads has greatly diminished their importance. A project is now on foot to reconstruct the Erie Canal so as to enable barges of 1000 tons to navigate it. The tonnage on the state canals in 1900 was 3,350,000 tons.

Geology and Mineral Resources.—Constructionally the state may be said to belong entirely to the Archæan and Palæozoic periods, the rock-masses beautifully illustrating almost the entire series from the Laurentian to the sub-Carboniferous. No unquestionable marine deposits, except in Long Island (Cretaceous), occur of later date than the latter. There are no coal-bearing strata in the state. A belt of Triassic (fluvio-marine?) deposits, cut by trap intrusions, occurs in the SE., a continuation of the more extensive series of like character developed in New Jersey. A large part of the state is covered with glacial drift, and much of its present physiographic aspect—its interior lakes, water-falls (Niagara), etc.—dates from the Glacial Period and is due to modelling by glacial ice. Much of Long Island is morainic character. Westchester and St. Lawrence cos. yield marble extensively, and it is also obtained near Glens Falls (black) and Hudson, and at many other points. The excellent iron-ores of the Clinton shales are largely mined, and there are extensive beds of magnetic iron in the Champlain and Adirondack regions. The salt-works of Onondaga, Wyoming, and Genesee cos. give the state first position among the states of the Union as a producer of this mineral. The product in 1904 was 8,600,656 barrels. The blue flagstones of the Hamilton group are largely quarried at Kingston and in its vicinity. Sandstone, limestone, and slate for builders' use are obtained at many points. Lime, cement (of which the state produces about one-half the product of the United States), and gypsum are extensively produced, the cement of Akron, Manlius, and Rosendale being of especial note. Natural gas and petroleum are found at various points of the western counties bordering on Pennsylvania. The yield of petroleum in 1903 was 1,162,978 barrels. The output of iron-ores (magnetite, red hematite, brown hematite, and the carbonate) in 1903 was 540,460 long tons. In 1900 the production of pig-iron was 292,827 long tons. All the aluminium produced in the United States in 1903 was turned out at the plants established at Niagara Falls and Massena Springs.

Climate.—The climate of New York presents the usual extremes of summer heat and winter cold which belong to the northern tier of states generally. Throughout the greater part of the state the winter's cold is more intense and the snow-fall is greater than in most New England districts of corresponding latitude; but there are fewer sudden and extreme changes. The mean annual temperature of the state is 46.5° F. An extreme summer temperature of 103°–105° is occasionally registered in the southern tier of counties and in the west (New York city, Buffalo), while a winter extreme of —25° to —40° is not rare in the north. Even in the lower valley of the Hudson a temperature of —18° has been recorded. The only endemic disease is an ordinarily mild type of malarial fever, which prevails in many parts of the state, especially in autumn; as a whole the state is a remarkably healthful one. The rainfall is usually ample and rarely excessive (at New York city, 42 inches per annum; in the Adirondacks, nearly 60 inches).

Agriculture.—More than half the area of New York is improved or cultivated land and, excepting the mountain-ridges and the Laurentian wilderness of the N., there is but little unproductive land in the state. The productive soils are of every variety of constitution, but they mostly contain abundance of lime. The Mohawk Valley is renowned for its broom-corn and factory-made cheese; Orange co. for its butter (a staple product of the whole state); Orange, Dutchess, Putnam, Greene, Westchester, and Rockland cos. for milk; Long Island for market-gardens and for its eggs; the northern counties for potatoes and hay; Onondaga, Chemung, and Steuben for tobacco; Madison, Ontario, Oneida, Otsego, and Schoharie for hops. Monroe and Orleans cos. raise enormous quantities of white beans. The central lake valleys are especially adapted to grape-culture. The principal crops in 1900 were: corn, 17,236,032 bushels; wheat, 6,496,166 bushels; oats, 44,538,974 bushels; barley, 3,751,924 bushels; rye, 3,189,165 bushels; buckwheat, 3,280,158 bushels; potatoes, 27,481,356 bushels; and hay, 3,351,991 tons. In 1900 there were 1,501,608 dairy-cows in the state and 1,094,781 other cattle. The wool-clip in the same year (washed and unwashed) was 4,914,528 pounds.

Manufactures.—New York ranks first among the states in the value of its manufactures, which are very varied and distributed throughout most parts of the state. The total value of the industrial products (including those re-used in the process of manufacture) in 1900 was $2,175,766,900. The values furnished by the leading industries in 1900 were: clothing, $233,370,447; foundry- and machine-shop products (exclusive of general iron-work, iron and steel, and cars), $96,636,517; textiles, $94,263,047; sugar and molasses (refining), $90,680,478; printing and publishing, $95,232,051; slaughtering, $57,431,293; liquors, $58,282,253; tobacco and cigars, $49,028,479; chemicals, $40,663,363; hosiery and knitted goods, $35,886,048; flour and grist-mill products, $42,796,340; boots and shoes, $25,585,631; leather, $23,205,991; electrical apparatus and supplies, $22,695,024; cheese, butter, and condensed milk (factory product), $26,557,888; lumber-mill products, $29,756,257; paper and wood-pulp, $26,715,628; furniture, $23,643,245.

Commerce.—The ports of the state, together with the railroads which cross the state boundary-lines into Canada, do a very large share of the import and export trade of the United States, the port of New York being by far the most important seat of commerce in this country, or, indeed, within the western hemisphere. A very large share of all goods exported from the country are shipped from, and by far the larger part of the foreign imports enter, this port; while its coasting trade is proportionally prominent. The state also does a large part of the lake-trade with the West and Northwest.

Fisheries.—Besides the whitefish-, shad-, and other lake and river fisheries, which are very important, the sea fisheries are quite extensive. Sag Harbor district employs numerous vessels in the cod- and mackerel-fisheries, and Buffalo handles lake fish to the value of hundreds of thousands of dollars. Still more extensive is the business of taking and rendering fish for oil and fish guano. Of this industry Long Island is a notable seat. Oyster-planting is an important occupation on the waters near New York.

Railroads.—The first railroad was opened in 1831, and extended from Albany to Schenectady, 17 miles. In 1846 the state had 727 miles of railway; in 1850, 1361 miles; in 1855, 2583 miles; in 1860, 2682 miles; in 1865, 3002 miles; in 1870, 3928 miles; in 1880, 6019 miles; in 1890, 7746 miles; and in 1900, 8230 miles.

The counties are 61 in number,—viz., Albany, Allegany, Broome, Cattaraugus, Cayuga, Chautauqua, Chemung, Chenango, Clinton, Columbia, Cortland, Delaware, Dutchess, Erie, Essex, Franklin, Fulton, Genesee, Greene, Hamilton, Herkimer, Jefferson, Kings, Lewis, Livingston, Madison, Monroe, Montgomery, Nassau, New York, Niagara, Oneida, Onondaga, Ontario, Orange, Orleans, Oswego, Otsego, Putnam, Queens, Rensselaer, Richmond, Rockland, St. Lawrence, Saratoga, Schenectady, Schoharie, Schuyler, Seneca, Steuben, Suffolk, Sullivan, Tioga, Tompkins, Ulster, Warren, Washington, Wayne, Westchester, Wyoming, and Yates.

The principal cities and towns, with their population in 1900, are New York (of which Brooklyn has formed a part since 1898), 3,437,202; Buffalo, 352,387; Rochester, 162,608; Syracuse, 108,374; Albany, the capital, 94,151; Troy, 60,651; Utica, 56,383; Yonkers, 47,931; Binghamton, 39,647; Elmira, 35,672; Schenectady, 31,682; Auburn, 30,345; Newburgh, 24,943; Kingston, 24,535; Poughkeepsie, 24,029; Cohoes, 23,910, etc.

Government.—The governor and the principal state officers are chosen for a term of 2 years. The legislature consists of a senate and an assembly, whose members are respectively chosen for 2 years and 1 year. The state sends 37 representatives to the lower house of the national Congress.

Public Institutions.—New York is abundantly supplied with public institutions,—reformatories, asylums, penitentiaries, institutions for deaf-mutes, etc.,—and it is hardly necessary in this place to more than mention the names of a few of the more prominent ones, such as the state prisons at Ossining (Sing Sing), Dannemora, and Auburn; the insane asylums at Buffalo, Poughkeepsie, Utica, Middletown, Binghamton, Ogdensburg, etc.; the reformatories at Randall's Island, Elmira, Napanoch, and Bedford, blind asylum at Batavia, etc.

Public education was first in some measure provided for in 1795. The higher education of the state is supervised by the regents of the "University of the State of New York," a corporation which does not dispense instruction, but creates, supervises, and visits colleges, academies, and academical union schools, and has power to confer the higher degrees, as well as to conduct written examinations, and to assemble the university convocation, which embraces the officers of academies and colleges. The leading institutions of learning in the state are Columbia University, New York University, and other colleges of New York city (see NEW YORK city), Cornell University at Ithaca, the universities of Rochester, Syracuse, and Buffalo, Colgate University at Hamilton, Hobart College at Geneva, Hamilton College at Clinton, and Union College at Schenectady. Vassar College at Poughkeepsie and Barnard College in the city of New York (affiliated with Columbia University) give the higher instruction to women. There are state normal schools or colleges at several of the larger cities and some of the minor interior towns.

The population in 1698 was 18,067; in 1703, 20,665; in 1723, 40,564; in 1731, 50,824; in 1737, 60,437; in 1749, 73,348; in 1756, 96,790; in 1771, 163,337; in 1790, 340,120; in 1800, 589,051; in 1810, 959,049; in 1820, 1,372,111; in 1830, 1,918,608; in 1840, 2,428,921; in 1850, 3,097,394; in 1860, 3,880,735; in 1870, 4,382,759; in 1880, 5,082,871; in 1890, 5,997,843; and in 1900, 7,268,012, including 5318 Indians stationed on reservations. Besides the original Dutch, Walloon, and English settlers, many Germans of the Palatinate early entered the province, very largely colonizing the Mohawk Valley. After the termination of the war of the Revolution, and the cession of the Indian lands, many thousands of farmers from Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont, and Pennsylvania came and occupied the fertile lands of central and western New York. For many years there have been large accessions of immigrants from Ireland, Germany, Austria-Hungary, Russia, Italy, and other European countries, and from Canada, especially in the larger towns. The foreign-born population in 1900 numbered 1,900,425. About one-half of the total population of the state is concentrated within the limits of New York city.

History.—This region was once divided between Indian tribes of the Iroquois and Algonquin stocks, the Five Nations of the Iroquois (who were afterwards joined by a sixth nation) being the most powerful tribes. In 1609 Henry Hudson, an English commander in the service of the Dutch East India Company, explored New York Bay and the Hudson River and named the country New Netherland. In the same year Lake Champlain was discovered by the French explorer whose name it bears. About 1613 the Dutch began establishing trading posts on Manhattan Island, where the town of New Amsterdam (New York) soon grew up. Through the agency of the Dutch West India Company, founded in 1621, the immigration became fairly brisk, the settlements extending from Long Island to the head of navigation on the Hudson. In 1664 the English, during a time of peace, took forcible possession of the then flourishing colony and gave it the name of New York, in honor of the duke of York (the future James II.), who had received a patent for the country from his brother, Charles II. The Dutch authority was afterwards for a short time restored (1673–74). The northern colonists suffered much during the French and Indian wars of the colonial period, but were powerfully defended by the Iroquois, who, however, assisted the British in the Revolutionary struggle. New York witnessed many of the most stirring events of the war for independence and was the last portion of the great battle-ground to be relinquished by the British. The national independence and the return of peace were followed by vexatious questions of jurisdiction between this state, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts; but the erection of the Green Mountain region into a new state (Vermont), and the relinquishment by Massachusetts of all claims in western New York except the right of soil, put an amicable end to both difficulties. Slavery was abolished in 1817. In 1825 the Erie Canal was opened. The present constitution is a revision, made in 1894, of the constitution of 1846.

New York, a county in the SE. part of New York, within the limits of the city of New York, is bounded on the W. by the Hudson River and on the E. by the East River. It comprises Manhattan Island, which is about 13 miles long, several lesser islands, namely, Blackwell's, Ward's, Randall's, Governor's, Bedloe's, and Ellis, and a portion of the main-land. Area, 63 sq. m. Pop. in 1890, 1,515,301; in 1900, 2,050,600.

New York, the commercial metropolis of the state of New York and of the United States, and the most populous and important city of the western hemisphere (ranking second among the cities of the world). It was until 1898 situated chiefly upon Manhattan Island, which extends from the junction of the East River (a tidal channel connecting upper New York Bay with Long Island Sound) and the Hudson up the latter 13½ miles and along the former about 8 miles, being separated from the main-land by the Harlem River, a navigable tidal waterway about 6 miles long, and Spuyten Duyvil Creek. This island has an average breadth of 1⅔ miles. In addition to Manhattan Island the New York of 1874–98 included a tract of nearly 20 sq. m. on the main-land, previously a part of Westchester co. By the consolidation act of 1896, which went into effect Jan. 1, 1898, the limits of the city were extended so as to include the former city of Brooklyn, a part of Queens co. in Long Island (with Flushing, Jamaica, Long Island City, Newtown, and part of Hempstead), Staten Island, and an additional tract of land on the main-land, besides some small islands. "Greater New York" as now constituted is officially divided into the boroughs of Manhattan (main New York), Brooklyn, Queens, Richmond (Staten Island), and the Bronx (the portion on the main-land). In its full extent the city covers an area of 320 sq. m., in which is included a part of New York Bay, and has a length of 35 miles. Pop. in 1900, 3,437,202. (The boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx represent what in ordinary parlance is understood by New York city, and they alone will be considered in the descriptive portion of this article. The other parts of New York will be found treated under their respective heads.) The lat. of the city-hall is 40° 42′ 43″ N., its lon. 74° 0′ 3″ W., and it is about 10 miles from the Atlantic Ocean, 144 miles by the Hudson River S. of Albany, 213 miles by rail SW. of Boston, and 90 miles NE. of Philadelphia. Lat. of Columbia University observatory, 40° 45′ 23″ N., lon. 73° 58′ 25″ W.

Within the present limits of the city (which includes Blackwell's, Ward's, and Randall's islands in the East River and Hart's Island, etc., in the Sound) are a number of former villages and hamlets, the names of which are still in colloquial use to designate the localities: indeed, the post-offices of some of them are continued as branches of the main post-office of the city under their former distinctive names. Among these are Harlem, Washington Heights (with Fort Washington), Inwood, Mott Haven, Port Morris, Melrose, Morrisania, Tremont, West Farms, Fordham, Kings Bridge, Spuyten Duyvil, Riverdale, and Mount St. Vincent.

The location of New York is strikingly beautiful. The majestic Hudson (or North) River, nearly a mile in width, here enters Upper New York Bay, a noble land-locked harbor, about 20 miles in circumference, which communicates with Lower New York Bay by the Narrows, a channel between Long Island and the hilly and verdant Staten Island, little more than a mile across. Opposite the upper part of the city the Palisades tower like a huge wall from the Hudson's shore to a height of 300–400 feet. The northern end of Manhattan Island rises picturesquely to a height of about 250 ft., and here are large stretches of land still rural in their aspect. Portions of the Harlem River offer charming bits of scenery. The borough of the Bronx is half city, half country. The main portion of New York is laid out with severe rectangular regularity, the streets and intersecting broader avenues taking ESE.–WNW. and NNE.–SSW. courses. In the southernmost parts (or below Tenth Street) the streets are mostly narrow and often irregular in their lines and intersections. In a part of this section, known as the New York "East Side," is concentrated a large portion of the resident foreign population, living mainly in densely packed tenement-houses. The chief thoroughfare of New York is Broadway, its most important business street and the most imposing commercial avenue of the world. It extends northward from the park called the Battery, near the southern end of Manhattan Island, and is built up for a distance of about 7 miles. Above Tenth Street it changes its direction somewhat, approaching nearer to the Hudson, and thus intersects some of the principal "avenues," breaking into the rectangular plan of the city. The northern portion of the city contains several stately avenues and boulevards, and on the west side, extending N. from Seventy-second Street for a distance of 3 miles, is the superb Riverside Drive (or Park), which affords most striking views of the North (or Hudson) River. The drive-way and promenade, which at present terminate in a noble viaduct, are now (1905) being extended northward by the construction of a great causeway. A prominent physiographic feature of this section of Manhattan Island is the abrupt elevation known as Morningside Heights, partly occupied by the Morningside Park, which rises to about 150 feet above the level of the river. On it are located the new buildings of Columbia University, St. Luke's Hospital, and the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, now (1905) in course of erection. Beyond Morningside Park a rocky ridge extends northward, known as Washington Heights.

The rapid northward development of the city has led to an extensive centring of population beyond the Harlem River and to the location of streets (as in Morrisania, West Farms, etc.) in direct continuation of, and harmony with, those of the island. The river is crossed by a number of bridges, of which the famous High Bridge, constructed to carry the old Croton Aqueduct (1842), consisting of 14 arches, and measuring 1460 feet in length, and the Washington Bridge, a steel structure erected in 1886–90 at a cost of $2,700,000, having two central spans of 510 feet each, and measuring 2400 feet in length, deserve special mention. The new Croton Aqueduct, which, with the old aqueduct, supplies the city's water and in itself has a capacity of 300,000,000 gallons daily, is carried under the Harlem River at a depth of 300 feet. The completion of the Harlem Ship Canal (1895) permits the passage of vessels of 10 feet draught between Long Island Sound and the Hudson River.

Near the head of Upper New York Bay are 3 islets belonging to the United States,—Governor's, Bedloe's, and Ellis islands. Governor's Island is a military station and has various fortifications. Ellis Island is the station where the bulk of the immigrants to the United States are received and examined. The East River islands are occupied by hospitals, asylums, and correctional institutions belonging to the city. On Blackwell's Island is one of the city penitentiaries. Uniting Manhattan Island with the borough of Brooklyn are two magnificent East River suspension bridges, with an elevation at the middle of the main span of 135 feet above high-water. The older, commonly known as the Brooklyn Bridge, was erected between the years 1870 and 1883. Its length, including the approaches, is 5990 ft.; the distance between the stone piers (278 ft. high) is 1595 ft. The new East River bridge, commonly called the Williamsburg Bridge, which was completed in 1904, greatly surpasses the older bridge in its dimensions, having a total length of 7200 ft. Its main span is 1600 ft. and its width is 118 ft. Its piers are made of steel frames. In addition to carriage- and foot-ways it carries six railway tracks. Between these two structures another gigantic bridge is (1905) in course of construction and a fourth one, the longest of all, is being built to connect the borough of Queens with Manhattan Island.

The vast commercial and financial interests of New York have their seat in the southern part of the island, most of the larger business-houses (wholesale and retail) and nearly all of the banking and fiduciary institutions being located S. of Twenty-fifth Street, the distance between which and the extremity of the island is about 3 miles. The main retail section is, however, rapidly extending northward, fine residential quarters giving way to business. Immediately N. of the principal seat of the retail trade is the quarter of the city containing the palatial hotels and the theatres. Beyond this follows the modern residential section, with its mammoth apartment-houses, its sumptuous private mansions, and its magnificent club-houses. A vast space in the middle of the island is occupied by Central Park. On both sides of the lower section of the city the river-fronts, for a distance of about 8 miles, present a succession of piers, with water deep enough for the largest ocean steamers, the greater number of which find their wharfage on the North River front. Much of the shipping of New York has its moorings at Brooklyn, where there are immense docks, and at Hoboken and Jersey City, on the New Jersey side of the Hudson River. An active ferry-boat service places Manhattan Island in communication with the boroughs on Long Island, with Staten Island (borough of Richmond), and with Jersey City and Hoboken. A double tunnel under the Hudson River to connect Jersey City with New York is nearing completion.

Among the more noteworthy streets of New York are Broadway, already referred to; Wall Street, the centre of the "magnates" in finance and transportation—the Lombard Street of the New World; Park Row, where are located the publication offices of some of the leading journals of the city; Fifth Avenue, ranking as the foremost street of wealth and fashion in the United States, now converted in part into a business street; Madison Avenue, second only to Fifth Avenue in the elegance of its private residences; West End Avenue, Central Park West, and the Riverside Drive, already mentioned, splendid residence streets; Sixth Avenue, a bustling seat of the retail trade; and Third Avenue, lined with modest shops, the longest business thoroughfare in the world. Among the streets which were conspicuous features of the New York of the middle of the nineteenth century, but which have been thrust into the background or have largely lost their importance, are Pearl, Fulton, Greenwich, Grand, Canal, and Hudson streets, East Broadway, and the broad avenue called the Bowery. A recreation course, skirting the Harlem River and reserved for fast driving, is the "Speedway." The architecture of the city until recently was marked by no special individuality or particularly attractive features. In the last quarter of a century, however, endless variety has been displayed in the construction of edifices of every class and New York outstrips all other cities in the development of the type of construction embodied in the lofty "sky-scrapers,"—steel-framed buildings carrying 20–30 stories and rising to the extraordinary height of 250–350 feet. The capacity of some of these houses (office-buildings) is such as to give lodgement to many hundred tenants.

New York's pre-eminence as the metropolis of the country makes it the seat of various national societies and associations for the advancement of religion, morals, knowledge, etc.,—as the American Bible Society, the American Tract Society, the publication and missionary societies of various religious denominations, etc.,—but it is also noted for its local societies and associations of similar kinds and for similar purposes. Among the more noteworthy organizations and institutions for the diffusion of science, art, and letters, and for the promotion of culture and learning among the people, are the Metropolitan Museum of Art, founded in 1871 and containing famous collections of Phœnician and Cypriote antiquities and one of the most valuable galleries of paintings in the United States; American Museum of Natural History, surpassed by few institutions of its kind in the world; National Academy of Design; American Geographical Society; New York Historical Society; New York Academy of Sciences; New York Academy of Medicine; Cooper Institute (or Union), established (1857) by the munificence of a single citizen, Peter Cooper, which provides free instruction in science, the mechanical and decorative arts, literature, etc.; and the National Arts Club, designed to further the arts and crafts. New York is the seat of the National Sculptural Society, the Society of American Artists, the Torrey Botanical Club, etc. The New York Philharmonic Society, founded in 1842, has played a great rôle in the musical life of America. Extensive zoological and botanical gardens are located in Bronx Park, in the borough of the Bronx.

Among the higher educational institutions of New York the first place is taken by Columbia University, which was chartered in 1754 as Kings College, was renamed Columbia College in 1784, and assumed the title of Columbia University in 1896. Since its complete reorganization in 1890 it contains full university faculties, with departments in law, medicine and surgery, applied science, philosophy, pure science, and political science. It has in association with it Barnard College (for women) and the Teachers' College. The medical department is the College of Physicians and Surgeons. The number of students in all departments is about 5000. The New York University, formerly the University of the City of New York, chartered in 1831, has departments of arts, science, law, and medicine (University and Bellevue Medical College, New York American Veterinary College). The College of the City of New York and the Normal College (for young women) are institutions on a very extensive scale. Of the schools of theology the Union Theological Seminary (Presbyterian) and the Protestant Episcopal General Theological Seminary have a national reputation. New York has numerous public libraries. The Mercantile, Young Men's Christian Association, and Mechanics and Tradesmen's are extensive circulating libraries. The New York Public Library, constituted in 1895 through the union of the Astor, Lenox, and Tilden foundations, to which the New York Free Circulating Library was subsequently added, possesses considerably more than 1,000,000 volumes. The library of Columbia University numbers upward of 350,000 volumes. Among the more notable churches are Trinity (Protestant Episcopal) Church, belonging to the wealthiest single church organization in the United States, a stately Gothic building at the junction of Wall Street and Broadway, erected in 1839–46 on the site of an older edifice; St. Paul's, the oldest church building of the city (1756); Grace Church (Protestant Episcopal), 1843–46; and St. Patrick's Cathedral, built of white marble, the most imposing ecclesiastical edifice in the United States, completed in 1879. Two of the Jewish synagogues, the Temple Emanu-El and the Temple Beth-El, are notable specimens of Moorish architecture. New York contains many large and influential club organizations of a political, social, and literary character, some of them possessing palatial club-houses.

Among the many notable buildings of New York are the post-office, a large Renaissance edifice (1876), costing nearly $7,000,000; city-hall, a portion of which dates from 1803; court-house, United States sub-treasury, United States custom-house, stock exchange, produce exchange, clearing house, chamber of commerce (belonging to the oldest commercial corporation of the United States, dating from 1770), building of the appellate court, library of Columbia University (one of the finest architectural monuments of New York), Astor and Lenox libraries, the splendid edifice of the Metropolitan Museum (situated in Central Park), the vast central station of the steam railroads entering the city, the palaces of the great insurance companies, armories, hospitals (of which the new Mount Sinai Hospital is the largest), and numerous large hotels and colossal apartment-houses unequalled for their elegance. Among the edifices in course of erection (1905) the splendid New York Public Library, occupying the site of the old Croton Reservoir on Fifth Avenue, and the new buildings of the College of the City of New York, magnificently located near the southern end of Washington Heights, deserve special mention. The theatres of New York cannot lay claim to external architectural attractions. The principal buildings devoted to music are the Metropolitan Opera House and Carnegie Hall. The leading places of amusement outside of the theatres are the Madison Square Garden and the so-called Hippodrome opened in 1905. The recreation piers projecting into the Hudson and East rivers, where open-air concerts are provided by the city in summer, are an interesting feature of New York. The city maintains a fine aquarium in the Battery Park, occupying the building formerly known as Castle Garden, through which for many years the bulk of the immigrants to the United States passed on their arrival. A comparatively new departure in home life in New York is found in the apartment-houses, which now predominate in large sections. But very few dwelling-houses for single families have been erected on Manhattan Island in recent years.

The public parks of New York as a whole are unsurpassed for their extent and attractiveness. Central Park is one of the finest pleasure-grounds in the world; without any natural advantages, by the liberal and judicious expenditure of money, one of the most delightful spots conceivable has been created out of a barren wilderness. Its area is 840 acres, about one-fifth of which is water, and it has many miles of carriage-drives and bridle-paths and 30 miles of foot-walks. A noteworthy object in Central Park is the Egyptian obelisk, one of Cleopatra's Needles, which was brought to New York in 1881. In the northern and newer section of the city a number of large parks (Bronx, Van Cortlandt, Crotona, Pelham Bay) have been laid out. Among the better known of the city squares are Washington, Union, Madison, and Tompkins squares. The most striking piece of monumental work belonging to the city is Grant's Tomb, a huge Doric mausoleum of white granite erected on Riverside Drive in 1891–97. The Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument, also on Riverside Drive, is a beautiful structure. At the S. end of Fifth Avenue is the Washington Arch. The equestrian statue of General Sherman, on the plaza at the SE. corner of Central Park, is a notable work by Saint-Gaudens. At the SW. corner of Central Park is the Columbus Monument. Prominent in New York harbor, on Bedloe's Island, is Bartholdi's colossal statue, "Liberty Enlightening the World," standing on a granite pedestal of 155 feet and reaching to a total height of 306 feet.

Communication throughout the city is afforded by an extensive system of surface (electric) tramways, by electric elevated roads, and by the great "subway" road which has recently been opened,—the last-named being one of the most extensive pieces of municipal engineering work undertaken in the United States. It traverses the whole of Manhattan Island and is to connect with Brooklyn by tunnel beneath the East River.

As a business centre, New York has long been not only the first city on this continent, but the second city of the world, London, the metropolis of the British realm, being its only superior in the variety, extent, and importance of its commerce, monetary transactions, and general business interests and enterprises. The United States has here its chief sub-treasury, and by far the larger part of all the financial transactions of the general government are effected through the banks and bankers of New York. The port of New York, which includes Brooklyn, Jersey City, Hoboken, etc., receives about two-thirds of the imports into the United States and about one-third of the exports from the United States passes through it. The total value of foreign imports and exports for the year 1901 was $1,057,000,000. About 10 ocean steamers bound for foreign countries clear the port on an average every day. The domestic trade of New York is immense, largely exceeding the foreign. Among the great railway lines that start from New York are the New York Central and Hudson River, the New York, New Haven and Hartford, the Pennsylvania, the Baltimore and Ohio, the Central R. of New Jersey, the Lackawanna, the West Shore, the Erie, the Lehigh Valley, the New York, Ontario and Western, and the Long Island. Most of these have their termini at Jersey City or Hoboken. A gigantic railway enterprise is the construction of a tunnel under the Hudson River, which, with a subway, will give access to the heart of New York city. A continuation of this work will be a tunnel under the East River to Long Island City, and it is proposed to build a bridge across the East River near its NE. extremity (between Long Island and the Bronx) so that direct railway communication will be established between New England and the Atlantic seaboard to the S. of New York. The passenger station now being built in New York in connection with this undertaking will be on an enormous scale.

The manufactures of New York are only less important than its commerce. The census of 1900 reported 39,777 establishments, employing 462,799 hands and yielding a product valued at $1,371,000,000. The leading industries comprise the manufacture of clothing and trimmings, cigars, malted liquors, machinery, foundry products, jewelry, musical instruments, leather goods, electrical apparatus, etc., printing and publishing, sugar-refining (carried on on a vast scale in Brooklyn), the roasting and grinding of coffee and spices, etc.

The government of the municipality of New York (i.e., New York proper and the boroughs that have been incorporated with it) is vested in a mayor and a board of aldermen. At the head of each borough is a president elected by the citizens. The mayor's term of office, beginning with the year 1906, is four years. He has the right of vetoing enactments of the board of aldermen, although, except in matters of franchise, his veto may be overridden. He has the power of appointing the heads of the various departments, with the exception of the comptroller, who is elected by the people.

The approaches to the harbor of New York are defended by strong fortifications at Sandy Hook, the Narrows, and at the head of Long Island Sound. New York has on the whole a healthful climate. The summer heat, however, is often well-nigh intolerable, especially when the atmosphere is surcharged with moisture, and the proximity to the sea, while it moderates the intensity of the winter cold, renders it also less endurable. Of the various near-by recreation resorts the most popular is Coney Island, on the Long Island shore, now included in the borough of Brooklyn.
